The Bhāgvat-Gītā

1785

Charles Wilkins

1749–1836
CHARLES WILKINS
To Nathaniel Smith, Esquire.

Banaris, 4th October 1784.

Sir,

To you, as to the first member of the first commercial body, not only of the present age, but of all the known generations of mankind, I presume to offer, and to recommend through you, for an offering to the public, a very curious specimen of the Literature, the Mythology, and Morality of the ancient Hindoos. It is an episodical extract from the “Māhābhārāt,” a most voluminous poem, affirmed to have been written upwards of four thousand years ago, by Krēēfnā Dwypayen Veıās, a learned Bramin; to whom is also attributed the compilation of “The Four Vêdes, or Bêdes,” the only existing original scriptures of the religion of Brahmā; and the composition of all the Poorâns, which are to this day taught in their schools, and venerated as poems of divine inspiration. Among these, and of superior estimation to the rest, is ranked the Māhābhārāt. But if the several books here enumerated be really the productions of their reputed author, which is greatly to be doubted, many arguments may be adduced to ascribe to the same source the invention of the religion itself, as well as its promulgation: and he must, at all events, claim the merit of having first reduced the gross and scattered tenets of their former faith into a scientific and allegorical system.

The Māhābhārāt contains the genealogy and general history of the house of Bhaurut, so called from Bhurrut its founder; the epithet Mahā, or Great, being prefixed in token of distinction: but its more particular object is to relate the dissentions and wars of the two great collateral branches of it, called Kooroos and Pandoos; both lineally descended in the second degree from Veēcheētrāveērya, their common ancestor, by their respective fathers Dreetraraśhtra and Pandoo.
The Kooroos, which indeed is sometimes used as a term comprehending the whole family, but most frequently applied as the patronymic of the elder branch alone, are said to have been one hundred in number, of whom Dooryōdun was esteemed the head and representative even during the life of his father, who was incapacitated by blindness. The sons of Pandoo were five; Yoodhishteer, Bheem, Arjŏŏn, Nĕkool, and Sehādĕo; who, through the artifices of Dooryōdun, were banished, by their uncle and guardian Dreetraraśhra, from Haſtenapoor, at that time the seat of government of Hindoſtan.

The exiles, after a series of adventures, worked up with a wonderful fertility of genius and pomp of language into a thousand sublime descriptions, returned with a powerful army to avenge their wrongs, and assert their pretensions to the empire in right of their father; by whom, though the younger brother, it had been held while he lived, on account of the disqualification already mentioned of Dreetraraśhra.

In this state the episode opens, and is called “The Gēētā of Bhăgvāt,” which is one of the names of Krĕĕshnă. Arjŏŏn is represented as the favorite and pupil of Krĕĕshnă, here taken for God himself, in his last Ootâr, or descent to earth in a mortal form.

The Preface of the Translator will render any further explanation of the Work unnecessary. Yet something it may be allowable for me to add respecting my own judgment of a Work which I have thus informally obtruded on your attention, as it is the only ground on which I can defend the liberty which I have taken.

Might I, an unlettered man, venture to prescribe bounds to the latitude of criticism, I should exclude, in estimating the merit of such a production, all rules drawn from the ancient or modern literature of Europe, all references to such sentiments or manners as are become the standards of propriety for opinion and action.
The Bhāgvāt-Geētā

in our own modes of life, and equally all appeals to our revealed tenets of religion, and moral duty. I should exclude them, as by no means applicable to the language, sentiments, manners, or morality appertaining to a system of society with which we have been for ages unconnected, and of an antiquity preceding even the first efforts of civilization in our own quarter of the globe, which, in respect to the general diffusion and common participation of arts and sciences, may be now considered as one community.

I would exact from every reader the allowance of obscurity, absurdity, barbarous habits, and a perverted morality. Where the reverse appears, I would have him receive it (to use a familiar phrase) as so much clear gain, and allow it a merit proportioned to the disappointment of a different expectation.

In effect, without bespeaking this kind of indulgence, I could hardly venture to persist in my recommendation of this production for public notice.

Many passages will be found obscure, many will seem redundant; others will be found cloathed with ornaments of fancy unsuited to our taste, and some elevated to a track of sublimity into which our habits of judgment will find it difficult to pursue them; but few which will shock either our religious faith or moral sentiments. Something too must be allowed to the subject itself, which is highly metaphysical, to the extreme difficulty of rendering abstract terms by others exactly corresponding with them in another language, to the arbitrary combination of ideas, in words expressing unsubstantial qualities, and more, to the errors of interpretation. The modesty of the Translator would induce him to defend the credit of his work, by laying all its apparent defects to his own charge, under the article last enumerated; but neither does his accuracy merit, nor the work itself require that concession.

It is also to be observed, in illustration of what I have premised, that the Brāhmāns are enjoined to perform a kind of spiritual discipline, not, I believe, unknown to some of the religious orders of Christians in the Romish Church. This consists in devoting a certain period of time to the contemplation of the Deity, his attributes, and the moral duties of this life. It is required of those who practise this exercise, not only that they divest their mind of all sensual desire, but that their attention be abstracted from every external object, and absorbed, with every sense, in the prescribed subject of their meditation. I myself was once a witness of a man employed in this species of devotion, at the principal temple of Banaris. His right hand and arm were enclosed in a loose sleeve or bag of red cloth, within which he passed the beads of his rosary, one after another, through his fingers, repeating with the touch of each (as I was informed) one of the names of God, while his mind laboured to catch and dwell on the idea of the quality which appertained to it, and shewed the violence of its exertion to attain this purpose by the convulsive movements of all his features, his eyes being at the same time closed, doubtless to assist the abstraction. The importance of this duty cannot be better illustrated, nor stronger marked, than by the last sentence with which Krēēśhnā closes his instruction to Arjōōn, and which is properly the conclusion of the Gēētā: “Hath what I have been speaking, O Arjōōn, been heard with thy mind fixed to one point? Is the distraction of thought, which arose from thy ignorance, removed?”

To those who have never been accustomed to this separation of the mind from the notices of the senses, it may not be easy to conceive by what means such a power is to be attained; since even the most studious men of our hemisphere will find it difficult so to restrain their attention but that it will wander to some object of present sense or recollection; and even the buzzing of a fly will sometimes have the power to disturb it. But if we are told that there have been men who were successively, for ages past, in the daily habit of abstracted contemplation, begun in the earliest period of youth, and continued in many to the maturity of age, each adding some portion of knowledge to the store accumulated by his predecessors; it is not assuming too much to conclude, that, as the mind ever gathers strength, like the body, by exercise, so in such an exercise it may in each have acquired the faculty to which they aspired, and that their collective studies may have led them to the discovery of new tracks and combinations of sentiment, totally different from the doctrines with which the learned of other nations are acquainted: doctrines, which however speculative and subtle, still, as they possess the advantage of being derived from a source so free from every adventitious mixture, may be equally founded in truth with the most simple of our own. But as they must differ, yet more than the most abstruse of ours, from the common modes of thinking, so they will require consonant modes of expression, which it may be impossible to render by any of the known terms of science in our language, or even to make them intelligible by definition. This is probably the case with some of the English phrases, as those of “Action,” “Application,” “Practice,” &c. which occur in Mr. Wilkins’s translation; and others, for the reasons which I have recited, he has left with the same sounds in which he found them. When the text is rendered obscure from such causes, candor requires that credit be given to it for some accurate meaning, though we may not be able to discover it; and that we ascribe their obscurity to the incompetency of our own perceptions, on so novel an application of them, rather than to the less probable want of perspicuity in the original composition.

With the deductions, or rather qualifications, which I have thus premised, I hesitate not to pronounce the Gēṭā a performance of great originality; of a sublimity of conception, reasoning, and diction, almost unequaled; and a single exception, among all the known religions of mankind, of a theology accurately corresponding with that of the Christian dispensation, and most powerfully illustrating its fundamental doctrines.

It will not be fair to try its relative worth by a comparison with the original text of the first standards of European composition; but let these be taken even in the most esteemed of their prose translations; and in that equal scale let their merits be weighed. I should not fear to place, in opposition to the best French versions of the most admired passages of the Iliad or Odyssey, or of the 1st and 6th Books of our own Milton, highly as I venerate the latter, the English translation of the Māhābhārāt.
Charles Wilkins

One blemish will be found in it, which will scarcely fail to make its own impression on every correct mind; and which for that reason I anticipate. I mean, the attempt to describe spiritual existences by terms and images which appertain to corporeal forms. Yet even in this respect it will appear less faulty than other works with which I have placed it in competition; and, defective as it may at first appear, I know not whether a doctrine so elevated above common perception did not require to be introduced by such ideas as were familiar to the mind, to lead it by a gradual advance to the pure and abstract comprehension of the subject. This will seem to have been, whether intentionally or accidentally, the order which is followed by the author of the Gēētā; and so far at least he soars far beyond all competitors in this species of composition. Even the frequent recurrence of the same sentiment, in a variety of dress, may have been owing to the same consideration of the extreme intricacy of the subject, and the consequent necessity of trying different kinds of exemplification and argument, to impress it with due conviction on the understanding. Yet I believe it will appear, to an attentive reader, neither deficient in method, nor in perspicuity. On the contrary, I thought it at the first reading, and more so at the second, clear beyond what I could have reasonably expected, in a discussion of points so far removed beyond the reach of the senses, and explained through so foreign a medium.

It now remains to say something of the Translator, Mr. Charles Wilkins. This Gentleman, to whose ingenuity, unaided by models for imitation, and by artists for his direction, your government is indebted for its printing-office, and for many official purposes to which it has been profitably applied, with an extent unknown in Europe, has united to an early and successful attainment of the Persian and Bengal languages, the study of the Sanskrit. To this he devoted himself with a perseverance of which there are few examples, and with a success which encouraged him to undertake the translation of the Mahabharat. This book is said to consist of more than one hundred thousand metrical stanzas, of which he has at this time translated more than a third; and, if I may trust to the imperfect tests by which I myself have tried a very small portion of it, through the medium of another language, he has rendered it with great accuracy and fidelity. Of its elegance, and the skill with which he has familiarized (if I may so express it) his own native language to so foreign an original, I may not speak, as from the specimen herewith presented, whoever reads it, will judge for himself.

Mr. Wilkins’s health having suffered a decline from the fatigues of business, from which his gratuitous labors allowed him no relaxation, he was advised to try a change of air for his recovery. I myself recommended that of Banaris, for the sake of the additional advantage which he might derive from a residence in a place which is considered as the first seminary of Hindoo learning; and I promoted his application to the Board, for their permission to repair thither, without forfeiting his official appointments during the term of his absence.

I have always regarded the encouragement of every species of useful diligence, in the servants of the Company, as a duty appertaining to my office; and have severely regretted that I have possessed such scanty means of exercising it, especially to such as required an exemption from official attendance; there being few emoluments in this service but such as are annexed to official employment, and few offices without employment. Yet I believe I may take it upon me to pronounce, that the service has at no period more abounded with men of cultivated talents, of capacity for business, and liberal knowledge; qualities which reflect the greater lustre on their possessors, by having been the fruit of long and laboured application, at a season of life, and with a licence of conduct, more apt to produce dissipation than excite the desire of improvement.

Such studies, independently of their utility, tend, especially when the pursuit of them is general, to diffuse a generosity of sentiment, and a disdain of the meaner occupations of such minds as are left nearer to the state of uncultivated nature; and you, Sir, will believe me, when I assure you, that it is on the virtue, not the ability of their servants, that the Company must rely for the permanency of their dominion.

Nor is the cultivation of language and science, for such are the studies to which I allude, useful only in forming the moral character and habits of the service. Every accumulation of knowledge, and especially such as is obtained by social communication with people over whom we exercise a dominion founded on the right of conquest, is useful to the state: it is the gain of humanity: in the specific instance which I have stated, it attracts and conciliates distant affections; it lessens the weight of the chain by which the natives are held in subjection; and it imprints on the hearts of our own countrymen the sense and obligation of benevolence. Even in England, this effect of it is greatly wanting. It is not very long since the inhabitants of India were considered by many, as creatures scarce elevated above the degree of savage life; nor, I fear, is that prejudice yet wholly eradicated, though surely abated. Every instance which brings their real character home to observation will impress us with a more generous sense of feeling for their natural rights, and teach us to estimate them by the measure of our own. But such instances can only be obtained in their writings: and these will survive when the British dominion in India shall have long ceased to exist, and when the sources which it once yielded of wealth and power are lost to remembrance.
The Bhāgavat-Gēētā

If you, Sir, on the perusal of Mr. Wilkins’s performance, shall judge it worthy of so honorable a patronage, may I take the further liberty to request that you will be pleased to present it to the Court of Directors, for publication by their authority, and to use your interest to obtain it? Its public reception will be the test of its real merit, and determine Mr. Wilkins in the prosecution or cessation of his present laborious studies. It may, in the first event, clear the way to a wide and unexplored field of fruitful knowledge; and suggest, to the generosity of his honorable employers, a desire to encourage the first persevering adventurer in a service in which his example will have few followers, and most probably none, if it is to be performed with the gratuitous labor of years lost to the provision of future subsistence: for the study of the Sānśkrĕĕt cannot, like the Persian language, be applied to official profit, and improved with the official exercise of it. It can only derive its reward, beyond the breath of fame, in a fixed endowment. Such has been the fate of his predecessor, Mr. Halhed, whose labors and incomparable genius, in two useful productions, have been crowned with every success that the public estimation could give them; nor will it detract from the no less original merit of Mr Wilkins, that I ascribe to another the title of having led the way, when I add, that this example held out to him no incitement to emulate it, but the prospect of barren applause. To say more, would be disrespect; and I believe that I address myself to a gentleman who possesses talents congenial with those which I am so anxious to encourage, and a mind too liberal to confine its beneficence to such arts alone as contribute to the immediate and substantial advantages of the state.

I think it proper to assure you, that the subject of this address, and its design, were equally unknown to the person who is the object of it; from whom I originally obtained the translation for another purpose, which on a second revival of the work I changed, from a belief that it merited a better destination.
Charles Wilkins

A mind rendered susceptible by the daily experience of unmerited reproach, may be excused if it anticipates even unreasonable or improbable objections. This must be my plea for any apparent futility in the following observation. I have seen an extract from a foreign work of great literary credit, in which my name is mentioned, with very undeserved applause, for an attempt to introduce the knowledge of Hindoo literature into the European world, by forcing or corrupting the religious consciences of the Pundits, or professors of their sacred doctrines. This reflection was produced by the publication of Mr. Halhed’s translation of the Poottee, or code of Hindoo laws; and is totally devoid of foundation. For myself I can declare truly, that if the acquisition could not have been obtained but by such means as have been supposed, I should never have fought it. It was contributed both cheerfully and gratuitously, by men of the most respectable characters for sanctity and learning in Bengal, who refused to accept more than the moderate daily subsistence of one rupee each, during the term that they were employed on the compilation; nor will it much redound to my credit, when I add, that they have yet received no other reward for their meritorious labors. Very natural causes may be ascribed for their reluctance to communicate the mysteries of their learning to strangers, as those to whom they have been for some centuries in subjection, never enquired into them, but to turn their religion into derision, or deduce from them arguments to support the intolerant principles of their own. From our nation they have received a different treatment, and are no less eager to impart their knowledge than we are to receive it. I could say much more in proof of this fact, but that it might look too much like self-commendation.
The Bhāgvāt-Gīētā
I have the honor to be, with respect,
Sir,
Your most obedient, and
Most humble Servant,
Warren Hastings.

Calcutta, 3d Decr 1784.

P. S. Since the above was written, Mr. Wilkins has transmitted to me a corrected copy of his Translation, with the Preface and Notes much enlarged and improved. In the former, I meet with some complimentary passages, which are certainly improper for a work published at my own solicitation. But he is at too great a distance to allow of their being sent back to him for correction, without losing the opportunity, which I am unwilling to lose, of the present dispatch; nor could they be omitted, if I thought myself at liberty to expunge them, without requiring considerable alterations in the context. They must therefore stand; and I hope that this explanation will be admitted as a valid excuse for me in passing them.

W. H.
Charles Wilkins
To The Honorable

WARREN HASTINGS, Esq.
Governor General, &c. &c.

Honorable Sir,

Unconscious of the liberal purpose for which you intended the Gēētā, when, at your request, I had the honor to present you with a copy of the manuscript, I was the less solicitous about its imperfections, because I knew that your extensive acquaintance with the customs and religious tenets of the Hindoos would elucidate every passage that was obscure, and I had so often experienced approbation from your partiality, and correction from you pen: It was the theme of a pupil to his preceptor and patron. But since I received your commands to prepare it for the public view, I feel all that anxiety which must be inseparable from one who, for the first time, is about to appear before that awful tribunal; and I should dread the event, were I not convinced that the liberal sentiments expressed in the letter you have done me the honor to write, in recommendation of the work, to the Chairman of the Direction, if permitted to accompany it to the press, would screen me, under its own intrinsic merit, from all censure.

The world, Sir, is so well acquainted with your boundless patronage in general, and of the personal encouragement you have constantly given to my fellow-servants in particular, to render themselves more capable of performing their duty in the various branches of commerce, revenue, and policy, by the study of the languages, with the laws and customs of the native, that it must deem the first fruit of every genius you have raised a tribute justly due to the source from which it sprang. As that personal encouragement alone first excited emulation in my breast, and urged me to prosecute my particular studies, even beyond the line of pecuniary reward, I humbly request you will permit me, in token of my gratitude, to lay the Gēētā publicly at your feet.

I have the honor to subscribe myself, with great respect,

Honorable Sir,
Your most obedient, and
Most humble Servant,

Banaris,
19th November, 1784.

Cha’s Wilkins.
THE TRANSLATOR’S PREFACE.

The following work, forming part of the Māhābhārāt, an ancient Hindoo poem, is a dialogue supposed to have passed between Krēĕshnă, an incarnation of the Deity, and his pupil and favorite Arjŏŏn, one of the five sons of Pāndŏŏ, who is said to have reigned about five thousand years ago, just before the commencement of a famous battle fought on the plains of Kŏŏrŏŏ-kshētră, near Dehly, at the beginning of the Kālĕĕ-Yoog, or fourth and present age of the world, for the empire of Bhārăt-vērśh, which, at that time, included all the countries that, in the present division of the globe, are called India, extending from the borders of Persia to the extremity of China; and from the snowy mountains to the southern promontory.

The Brāhmăns esteem this work to contain all the grand mysteries of their religion; and so careful are they to conceal it from the knowledge of those of a different persuasion, and even the vulgar of their own, that the Translator might have sought in vain for assistance, had not the liberal treatment they have of late years experienced from the mildness of our government, the tolerating principles of our faith, and, above all, the personal attention paid to the learned men of their order by him under whose auspicious administration they have so long enjoyed, in the midst of surrounding troubles, the blessings of internal peace, and his exemplary encouragement, at length happily created in their breasts a confidence in his countrymen sufficient to remove almost every jealous prejudice from their minds.

It seems as if the principal design of these dialogues was to unite all the prevailing modes of worship of those days; and, by setting up the doctrine of the unity of the Godhead, in opposition to idolatrous sacrifices, and the worship of images, to undermine the tenets inculcated by the Vēds; for although the author dared not make a direct attack, either upon the prevailing prejudices of the people, or the divine authority of those ancient books; yet, by offering eternal happiness to such as worship Brähm, the Almighty, whilst he declares the reward of such as follow other Gods shall be but a temporary enjoyment of an inferior heaven, for a period measured by the extent of their virtues, his design was to bring about the downfall of Polytheism; or, at least, to induce men to believe God present in every image before which they bent, and the object of all their ceremonies and sacrifices.

The most learned Brâhmâns of the present times are Unitarians according to the doctrines of Krēăšnă; but, at the same time that they believe but in one God, an universal Spirit, they so far comply with the prejudices of the vulgar, as outwardly to perform all the ceremonies inculcated by the Vēds, such as sacrifices, ablution, &c. They do this, probably, more for the support of their own consequence, which could only arise from the great ignorance of the people, than in compliance with the dictates of Krēăšnă: indeed, this ignorance, and these ceremonies, are as much the bread of the Brâhmâns, as the superstition of the vulgar is the support of the priesthood in many other countries.

The reader will have the liberality to excuse the obscurity of many passages, and the confusion of sentiments which runs through the whole, in its present form. It was the Translator’s business to remove as much of this obscurity and confusion as his knowledge and abilities would permit. This he hath attempted in his Notes; but as he is conscious they are still insufficient to remove the veil of mystery, he begs leave to remark, in his own justification, that the text is but imperfectly understood by the most learned Brâhmâns of the present times; and that, small as the work may appear, it has had more comments than the Revelations. These have not been totally disregarded; but, as they were frequently found more obscure than the original they were intended to elucidate, it was thought better to leave many of the most difficult passages for the exercise of the reader’s own judgment, than to mislead him by such wild opinions as no one syllable of the text could authorize.
The Bhāgvāt-Gēētā

Some apology is also due for a few original words and proper names that are left untranslated, and unexplained. The Translator was frequently too diffident of his own abilities to hazard a term that did but nearly approach the sense of the original, and too ignorant, at present, of the mythology of this ancient people, to venture any very particular account, in his Notes, of such Deities, Saints, and Heroes, whose names are but barely mentioned in the text. But should the same Genius, whose approbation first kindled emulation in his breast, and who alone hath urged him to undertake, and supported him through the execution of far more laborious tasks than this, find no cause to withdraw his countenance, the Translator may be encouraged to prosecute the study of the theology and mythology of the Hindoos, for the future entertainment of the curious.

It is worthy to be noted, that KrēĒšnă, throughout the whole, mentions only three of the four books of the Vēds, the most ancient scriptures of the Hindoos, and those the three first, according to the present order. This is a very curious circumstance, as it is the present belief that the whole four were promulgated by Brāhmā at the creation. The proof then of there having been but three before his time, is more than presumptive, and that so many actually existed before his appearance; and as the fourth mentions the name of Krēēśnă, it is equally proved that it is a posterior work. This observation has escaped all the commentators, and was received with great astonishment by the Pāndēēt, who was consulted in the translation.

The Translator has not as yet had leisure to read any part of those ancient scriptures. He is told, that a very few of the original number of chapters are now to be found, and that the study of these is so difficult, that there are but few men in Banaris who understand any part of them. If we may believe the Māhābhārāt, they were almost lost five thousand years ago; when Vyās, so named from having superintended the compilation of them, collected the scattered leaves, and, by the assistance of his disciples, collated and preserved them in four books.

As a regular mode hath been followed in the orthography of the proper names, and other original words, the reader may be guided in the pronunciation of them by the following explanation.

(g) has always the hard sound of that letter in gun.
(j) the soft sound of (g), or of (J) in James.
(y) is generally to be considered as a consonant, and to be pronounced as that letter before a vowel, as in the word yarn.
(h) preceded by another consonant, denotes it to be aspirated.
(ā) is always to be pronounced short, like (u) in butter.
(ēē) long, and broad, like (ā) in all, call.
(ēē) short, as (i) in it.
(ōō) short, as (oo) in foot.
(ōō) long.
(ē) open and long.
(i) as that letter is pronounced in our alphabet.
(ō) long, like (ō) in over.
(ow) long, like (ow) in how.
The

Bhāgvāt-Geētā,

or

Dialogues

of Krēēshnā and Ārjōōn.

Charles Wilkins
Dhrēētārāshtrā said,

“Tell me, O Śanjāy, what the people of my own party, and those of the Pāndōōs, who are assembled at Kōōroō-kśētrā resolved for war, have been doing.

Śanjāy replied,

“Dōōryōdhān having seen the army of the Pāndōōs drawn up for battle, went to his Preceptor, and addressed him in the following words:”

“Behold! O master, saith he, the mighty army of the sons of Pāndōō drawn forth by thy pupil, the experienced son of Drōōpād. In it are heroes, such as Bhēēm or Ārjōōn: there is Yōōyōōdhanā, and Vēērāt, and Drōōpād, and Dhrēēshtākēōō, and Chēēkēētānā, and the valiant prince of Kāēē, and Pōōroōjēēt, and Kōōntēēbhōjēē, and Sīyā a mighty chief, and Yōōdhamānynōō-Vēēkrāntā, and the daring Oōtāmowjēē; so the son of Sōōbhādhrā, and the sons of Krēēhnā the daughter of Drōōpād, all of them great in arms. Be acquainted also with the names of those of our party who are the most distinguished. I will mention a few of those who are amongst my generals, by way of example. There is thyself, my Preceptor, and Bhēēshmā, and Krēēpā the conqueror in battle, and Ājwāthhāmā, and Vēēkārnā, and the son of Sāmā-dāttā, with others in vast numbers who for my service have forsworn the love of life. They are all of them practised in the use of arms, and experienced in every mode of fight. Our innumerable forces are commanded by Bhēēshmā, and the inconsiderable army of our foes is led by Bhēēm. Let all the generals, according to their respective divisions, stand in their posts, and one and all resolve Bhēēshmā to support.”
The ancient chief, and brother of the grandfire of the Kōorōs, then, shouting with a voice like a roaring lion, blew his shell to raise the spirits of the Kōorō chief; and instantly innumerable shells, and other warlike instruments, were struck up on all sides, so that the clangour was excessive. At this time Krēēšhnā and Ārjōōn were standing in a splendid chariot drawn by white horses. They also sounded their shells, which were of celestial form: the name of the one which was blown by Krēēšhnā, was Pānchājānyā, and that of Ārjōōn was called Dēvā-dāttā. Bhēēm, of dreadful deeds, blew his capacious shell Powndrā, and Yōōdēēśhtēēr, the royal son of Kōontēē, founded Ānāntā-Vēējāy. Nākōōl and Sāhādēēvā blew their shells also; the one called Sōōgōshā, the other Mānēēpōōšpākā. The prince of Kāfēē of the mighty bow, Sēēkhāndēē, Dhrēēśhtādḥōōmnā, Veerāta, Sātyākēē of invincible arm, Drōōpd and the sons of his royal daughter Krēēšhnā, with the son of Sōōbhādrā, and all the other chiefs and nobles, blew also their respective shells; so that their shrill sounding voices pierced the hearts of the Kōorōs, and re-echoed with a dreadful noise from heaven to earth.

In the mean time Ārjōōn, perceiving that the sons of Dhrēētārāśhtrā stood ready to begin the fight, and that the weapons began to fly abroad, having taken up his bow, addressed Krēēšhnā in the following words:

Ārjōōn.

“I pray thee, Krēēšhnā, cause my chariot to be driven and placed between the two armies, that I may behold who are the men that stand ready, anxious to commence the bloody fight; and with whom it is that I am to fight in this ready field; and who

---

1 The ancient chief.—Bhēēšhnā, brother of Vēēchēērā-vēēryā, grandfather of the Kōorōs and the Pāndōōs.
2 Shell.—The conch or chank.
3 Krēēšhnā.—An incarnation of the Deity.
4 Ārjōōn.—The third son of Pāndōō, and the favorite of Krēēšhnā.
they are that are here assembled to support the vindictive son of Dhrĕĕtārāśthrā in the battle.

Krĕĕʃhnā being thus addressed by Ārjŏon, drove the chariot; and, having caused it to halt in the midst of the space in front of the two armies, had Ārjŏon cast his eyes towards the ranks of the Kŏŏrŏŏs, and behold where stood the aged Bhēēʃhmā, and Drŏn, with all the chief nobles of their party. He looked at both the armies, and beheld, on either side, none but grandfathers, uncles, cousins, tutors, sons, and brothers, near relations, or bosom friends; and when he had gazed for a while, and beheld such friends as these prepared for the fight, he was seized with extreme pity and compunction, and uttered his sorrow in the following words:

Ārjŏon.

“Having beheld, O Krĕĕʃhnā! my kindred thus standing anxious for the fight, my members fail me, my countenance withereth, the hair standeth on end upon my body, and all my frame trembleth with horror! Even Gāndēēv my bow escapeth from my hand, and my skin is parched and dried up. I am not able to stand; for my understanding, as it were, turneth round, and I behold inauspicious omens on all sides. When I shall have destroyed my kindred, shall I longer look for happiness? I wish not for victory, Krĕĕʃhnā; I want not dominion; I want not pleasure; for what is dominion, and the enjoyments of life, or even life itself, when those, for whom dominion, pleasure, and enjoyment were to be coveted, have abandoned life and fortune, and stand here in the field ready for the battle? Tutors, sons and fathers, grandfathers and grandsons, uncles and nephews, cousins, kindred, and friends! Although they would kill me, I wish not to fight them; no not even for the dominion of the three regions of the universe, much less for this little earth! Having killed the sons of Dhrĕĕtārāśthrā, what pleasure, O Krĕĕʃhnā, can we enjoy? Should we destroy them, tyrants as they are, sin would take refuge with us. It therefore behoveth

Gāndēēv my bow.—The gift of Vărŏŏn the God of the Ocean.
us not to kill such near relations as these. How, O Krē rêḥnā, can we be happy hereafter, when we have been the murderers of our race? What if they, whose minds are depraved by the lust of power, see no sin in the extirpation of their race, no crime in the murder of their friends, is that a reason why we should not resolve to turn away from such a crime, we who abhor the sin of extirpating the kindred of our blood? In the destruction of a family, the ancient virtue of the family is lost. Upon the loss of virtue, vice and impiety overwhelm the whole of a race. From the influence of impiety the females of a family grow vicious; and from women that are become vicious are born the spurious brood called Vārnā-sānkăr. The Sānkār provideth Hell 6 both for those which are slain and those which survive; and their forefathers 7, being deprived of the ceremonies of cakes and water offered to their names, sink into the infernal regions. By the crimes of those who murder their own relations, sore cause of contamination and birth of Vārnā-sānkār-s, the family virtue, and the virtue of a whole tribe is for ever done away; and we have been told, O Krē rêḥnā, that the habitation of 6 Hell.—In the original Nārk. The infernal regions, supposed to be situated at the bottom of the earth, where those whose virtues are less than their vices are doomed to dwell for a period proportioned to their crimes, after which they rise again to inhabit the bodies of unclean beasts.

7 Forefathers, &c.—The Hindoos are enjoined by the Vēds to offer a cake, which is called Pēĕndā, to the ghosts of their ancestors, as far back as the third generation. This ceremony is performed on the day of the new moon in every month. The offering of water is in like manner commanded to be performed daily, and this ceremony is called Tārpān, to satisfy, appease,—The souls of such men as have left children to continue their generation, are supposed to be transported, immediately upon quitting their bodies, into a certain region called the Pēĕtrēĕ-lōg, where they may continue in proportion to their former virtues, provided these ceremonies be not neglected; otherwise they are precipitated into Nārk, and doomed to be born again in the bodies of unclean beasts; and until, by repeated regenerations, all their sins are done away, and they attain such a degree of perfection as will entitle them to what is called Mōŏktēĕ, eternal salvation, by which is understood a release from future transmigration, and an absorption in the nature of the Godhead, who is called Brāhm. These ceremonies, which are called Srādh, were not unknown to the Greeks and Romans, and are still practised by the followers of Mahommed.
The Bhāgvāt-Gēētā

those mortals whose generation hath left its virtue, shall be in Hell. Woe is me! what a great crime are we prepared to commit! Alas! that for the lust of the enjoyments of dominion we stand here ready to murder the kindred of our own blood! I would rather patiently suffer that the sons of Dhrēētārāśtrā, with their weapons in their hands, should come upon me, and, unopposed, kill me unguarded in the field.”

When Ārjōōn had ceased to speak, he sat down in the chariot between the two armies; and having put away his bow and arrows, his heart was overwhelmed with affliction.
The Bhāgvāt-Gītā
Lecture II.

Of the Nature of the Soul, and Speculative doctrines.

Krēĕshnā beholding him thus influenced by compunction, his eyes overflowing with a flood of tears, and his heart oppressed with deep affliction, addressed him in the following words:

Krēĕshnā.

"Whence, O Ārjōŏn, cometh unto thee, thus standing in the field of battle, this folly and unmanly weakness? It is disgraceful, contrary to duty, and the foundation of dishonour. Yield not thus to unmanliness, for it ill becometh one like thee. Abandon this despicable weakness of thy heart, and stand up."

Ārjōŏn.

"How, O Krēĕshnā, shall I resolve to fight with my arrows in the field against such as Bhēĕshmā and Drōn, who, of all men, are most worthy of my respect? I would rather beg my bread about the world, than be the murderer of my preceptors, to whom such awful reverence is due. Should I destroy such friends as these, I should partake of possessions, wealth, and pleasures, polluted with their blood. We know not whether it would be better that we should defeat them, or they us; for those, whom having killed, I should not wish to live, are even the sons and people of Dhrēĕtarāštrā who are here drawn up before us. My compassionate nature is overcome by the dread of sin.

Tell me truly what may be best for me to do. I am thy disciple, wherefore instruct me in my duty, who am under thy tuition; for

---

Contrary to duty.—Contrary to the duty of a soldier.

29
my understanding is confounded by the dictates of my duty, and I see nothing that may assuage the grief which drieth up my faculties, although I were to obtain a kingdom without a rival upon earth, or dominion over the hosts of heaven.”

Ārjōon having thus spoken to Krēēshnā, and declared that he would not fight, was silent. Krēēshnā smiling, addressed the afflicted prince, standing in the midst of the two armies, in the following words:

Krēēshnā.

“Thou grieves for those who are unworthy to be lamented, whilst thy sentiments are those of the wise men. The wise neither grieve for the dead nor for the living. I myself never was not, nor thou, nor all the princes of the earth; nor shall we hereafter cease to be. As the soul in this mortal frame findeth infancy, youth, and old age; so, in some future frame, will it find the like. One who is confirmed in this belief, is not disturbed by anything that may come to pass. The sensibility of the faculties giveth heat and cold, pleasure and pain; which come and go, and are transient and inconstant. Bear them with patience, O son of Bhărāt; for the wise man, whom these disturb not, and to whom pain and pleasure are the same, is formed for immortality. A thing imaginary hath no existence, whilst that which is true is a stranger to non-entity. By those who look into the principles of things, the design of each is seen. Learn that he by whom all things were formed is incorruptible, and that no one is able to effect the destruction of this thing which is inexhaustible. These bodies, which envelope the souls which inhabit them, which are eternal, incorruptible, and surpassing all conception, are declared to be finite beings; wherefore, O Ārjōon, resolve to fight. The man who believeth that

9 By the dictates of my duty.—The duty of a soldier, in opposition to the dictates of the general moral duties.

10 The wise men.—Pāndēets, or expounders of the law; or in a more general sense, such as by meditation have attained that degree of perfection which is called Gnān, or inspired wisdom.
it is the soul which killeth, and he who thinketh that the soul may be destroyed, are both alike deceived; for it neither killeth, nor is it killed. It is not a thing of which a man may say, it hath been, it is about to be, or is to be hereafter; for it is a thing without birth; it is ancient, constant, and eternal, and is not to be destroyed in this its mortal frame. How can the man, who believeth that this thing is incorruptible, eternal, inexhaustible, and without birth, think that he can either kill or cause it to be killed? As a man throweth away old garments, and putteth on new, even so the soul, having quitted its old mortal frames, entereth into others which are new. The weapon divideth it not, the fire burneth it not, the water corrupteth it not, the wind drieth it not away; for it is indivisible, inconsumable, incorruptible, and is not to be dried away: it is eternal, universal, permanent, immovable; it is invisible, inconceivable, and unalterable; therefore, believing it to be thus, thou shouldest not grieve. But whether thou believest it of eternal birth and duration, or that it dieth with the body, still thou hast no cause to lament it. Death is certain to all things which are subject to birth, and regeneration to all things which are mortal; wherefore it doth not behove thee to grieve about that which is inevitable. The former state of beings is unknown; the middle state is evident, and their future state is not to be discovered. Why then shouldest thou trouble thyself about such things as these? Some regard the soul as a wonder, whilst some speak, and others hear of it with astonishment; but no one knoweth it, although he may have heard it described. This spirit being never to be destroyed in the mortal frame which it inhabiteth, it is unworthy for thee to be troubled for all these mortals. Cast but thy eyes towards the duties of thy particular tribe, and it will ill become thee to tremble. A soldier of the Kśatrēĕ tribe hath no duty superior to fighting. Just to thy wish the door of heaven is found open before thee. Such soldiers only as are the favorites of Heaven obtain such a glorious fight as this. But, if thou wilt not perform the duty of thy calling, and fight out the field, thou wilt abandon thy duty and thy honor, and be guilty of a crime. Mankind speak of thy renown as infinite and inexhaustible. The fame of one who hath been respected in the world is extended even beyond the dissolution of the body. The generals of the armies will think that thy retirement from the field arose from fear, and thou wilt become despicable, even amongst those by whom thou wert wont to be respected. Thy enemies will speak of thee in words which are unworthy to be spoken, and depreciate thy courage and abilities: what can be more dreadful than this! If thou are slain thou wilt obtain heaven; if thou are victorious thou wilt enjoy a world for thy reward; wherefore, son of Kōōntēē, arise and be determined for the battle. Make pleasure and pain, gain and loss, victory and defeat, the same, and then prepare for battle; or if thou dost not, thou wilt be criminal in a high degree. Let thy reason be thus applied in the field of battle.

This thy judgment is formed upon the speculative doctrines of the Sānkhyā ūhastra; hear what it is in the practical, with which being endued thou shalt forfake the bonds of action 11. A very small portion of this duty delivereth a man from great fear. In this there is but one judgment; but that is of a definite nature, whilst the judgments of those of indefinite principles are infinite and of many branches.

Men of confined notions, delighting in the controversies of the Vēds, tainted with worldly lufts, and preferring a transient enjoyment of heaven to eternal absorption, whilst they declare there is no other reward, pronounce, for the attainment of worldly riches and enjoyments, flowery sentences, ordaining innumerable and manifold ceremonies, and promising rewards for the actions

11 The bonds of action.—The Hindoos believe that every action of the body, whether good or evil, confineth the soul to mortal birth; and that an eternal release, which they call Mōōktēē, is only to be attained by a total neglect of all sublunary things, or, which is the same thing according to the doctrine of Krēēśhnā, the abandonment of all hopes of the reward of our actions; for such reward, they say can only be a short enjoyment of a place in heaven, which they call Swārg; because no man can, merely by his actions, attain perfection, owing to the mixture of good and evil which is implanted in his constitution.
The Bhāgvāt-Gēētā

of this life. The determined judgment of such as are attached to riches and enjoyment, and whose reason led astray by this doctrine, is not formed upon mature consideration and meditation. The objects of the Vēds are of a threefold nature. Be thou free from a threefold nature; be free from duplicity, and stand firm in the path of truth; be free from care and trouble, and turn thy mind to things which are spiritual. The knowing divine findeth as many uses in the whole Vēds collectively, as in a reservoir full flowing with water.

Let the motive be in the deed, and not in the event. Be not one whose motive for action is the hope of reward. Let not thy life be spent in inaction. Depend upon application, perform thy duty, abandon all thought of the consequence, and make the event equal, whether it terminate in good or evil; for such an equality is called Yōg. The action stands at a distance inferior to the application of wisdom. Seek an asylum then in wisdom alone; for the miserable and unhappy are so on account of the event of things. Men who are endued with true wisdom are unmindful of good or evil in this world. Study then to obtain this application of thy understanding, for such application in business is a precious art.

Wise men, who have abandoned all thought of the fruit which is 12 The objects of the Vēds are of a threefold nature.—The commentators do not agree with respect to the signification of this passage; but, as the Vēds teach three distinct systems of religion, it is probable that it refers to this circumstance.

13 Yōg.—There in no word in the Sānjkṛēt language that will bear so many interpretations as this. Its first signification is junction or union. It is also used for bodily or mental application; but in this work it is generally used as a theological term, to express the application of the mind in spiritual things, and the performance of religious ceremonies. The word Yōgēē, a devout man, is one of its derivatives. If the word devotion be confined to the performance of religious duties, and a contemplation of the Deity, it will generally serve to express the sense of the original; as will devout and devoted for its derivatives.

14 Wisdom.—Wherever the word wisdom is used in this Translation, is to be understood inspired wisdom, or a knowledge of the Divine Nature. The original word is Gnān, or as it is written Jnān.
produced from their actions, are freed from the chains of birth, and go to the regions of eternal happiness.

When thy reason shall get the better of the gloomy weakness of thy heart, then shalt thou have attained all knowledge which hath been, or is worthy to be taught. When thy understanding, by study brought to maturity, shall be fixed immovably in contemplation, then shall it obtain true wisdom.”

Ārjōñ. What, O Krēēshnā, is the distinction of that wise and steady man who is fixed in contemplation? What may such a sage declare? Where may he dwell? How may he act?

Krēēshnā. A man is said to be confirmed in wisdom, when he forsaiketh every desire which entereth into his heart, and of himself is happy, and contented in himself. His mind is undisturbed in adversity, he is happy and contented in prosperity, and he is a stranger to anxiety, fear, and anger. Such a wise man is called a Mōōnēē. The wisdom of that man established, who in all things is without affection; and, having received good or evil, neither rejoiceth at the one, nor is cast down by the other. His wisdom is confirmed, when, like the tortoise, he can draw in all his members, and restrain them from their wonted purposes. The hungry man loseth every other object but the gratification of his appetite, and when he is become acquainted with the Supreme, he loseth even that. The tumultuous senses hurry away, by force, the heart even of the wise man who striveth to restrain them. The inspired man, trusting in me, may quell them and be happy. The man who hath his passions in subjection, is possessed of true wisdom.

The man who attendeth to the inclinations of the senses, in them hath a concern; from this concern is created passion, from passion anger, from anger is produced folly 15, from folly a depravation of the memory, from the loss of memory the loss of reason, and from the loss of reason the loss of all! A man of a governable mind, enjoying the objects of his senses, with all his faculties rendered obedient to this will, and freed from pride and malice obtaineth happiness supreme. In this happiness is born to him an exemption from all his troubles; and his mind being thus at ease, wisdom presently floweth to him from all sides. The man who attendeth not to this, is without wisdom or the power of contemplation. The man who is incapable of thinking, hath no rest. What happiness can he enjoy who hath no rest? The heart, which followeth the dictates of the moving passions, carrieth away his reason, as the storm the bark in the raging ocean. The man, therefore, who can restrain all his passions from their inordinate desires, is endued with true wisdom. Such a one walketh but in that night when all things go to rest, the night of time. The contemplative MōnēŚ sleepeth but in the day of time, when all things wake.

The man whose passions enter his heart as waters run into the unswelling passive ocean, obtaineth happiness; not he who lusteth in his lusts. The man who, having abandoned all lusts of the flesh, walketh without inordinate desires, unassuming, and free from pride, obtaineth happiness. This is divine dependance. A man being possessed of this confidence in the Supreme, goeth not astray: even at the hour of death, should he attain it, he shall mix with the incorporeal nature of Brāhm.

15 Folly.—In the original Mōhā, which signifies an embarrassment of the faculties, arising from the attendant qualities of the principles of organized matter.
CHARLES WILKINS
Lecture III.

Of Works.

Ärjōon.

If, according to thy opinion, the use of the understanding be superior to the practice of deeds, why then dost thou urge me to engage in an undertaking so dreadful as this? Thou, as it were, confoundest my reason with a mixture of sentiments; wherefore choose one amongst them, by which I may obtain happiness, and explain it unto me.

Krēēshna.

It hath before been observed by me, that in this world there are two institutes: That of those who follow the Sānkhyā, or speculative science, which is the exercise of reason in contemplation; and the practical, or exercise of the moral and religious duties.

The man enjoyeth not freedom from action, from the non-commencement of that which he hath to do; nor doth he obtain happiness from a total inactivity. No one ever resteth a moment inactive. Every man is involuntarily urged to act by those principles which are inherent in his nature. The man who restraineth his active faculties, and fitteth down with his mind attentive to the objects of his senses, is called one of an aſtrayed soul, and the practiſer of deceit. So the man is praſied, who, having subdued all his passions, performeth with his active faculties all the functions of life, unconcerned about the event. Perform the settled functions: action is preferable to inaction. The journey of thy mortal frame may not succeed from inaction. This busy world is engaged from other motives than the worſhip of the Deity. Abandon then, O son of Kŏontē, all selfish motives, and perform thy duty for him alone.

16 The practice of deeds.—The performance of religious ceremonies and moral duties, called Kārmā-Yōg.
When in ancient days Brāhmā 17, the lord of the creation, had formed mankind, and, at the same time, appointed his worship, he spoke and said: “With this worship pray for increase, and let it be that on which ye shall depend for the accomplishment of all your wishes. With this remember the Gods, that the Gods may remember you. Remember one another, and ye shall obtain supreme happiness. The Gods being remembered in worship, will grant you the enjoyment to your wishes. He who enjoyeth what hath been given unto him by them, and offereth not a portion unto them, is even as a thief. Those who eat not but what is left of the offerings, shall be purified of all their transgressions. Those who dress their meat but for themselves, eat the bread of sin. All things which have life are generated from the bread which they eat. Bread is generated from rain; rain from divine worship, and divine worship from good works. Know that good works come from Brāhm, whose nature is incorruptible; wherefore the omnipresent Brāhm is present in the worship.”

The sinful mortal, who delighteth in the gratification of his passions, and followeth not the wheel, thus revolving in the world, liveth but in vain.

But the man who may be self-delighted and self-satisfied, and who may be happy in his own soul, hath no occasion 18. He hath no interest either in that which is done, or that which is not done; and there is not, in all things which have been created, any object on which he may place dependance. Wherefore, perform thou that which thou hast to do, at all times, unmindful of the event; for the man who doeth that which he hath to do without affection, obtaineth the Supreme.

17 Brāhmā.—The Deity in his creative quality.
18 Hath no occasion.—Hath no occasion to perform the ceremonial arts of religion.
Jănäkä and others have attained perfection\(^{19}\) even by works. Thou shouldst also observe what is the practice of mankind, and act accordingly. The man of low degree followeth the example of him who is above him, and doeth that which he doeth. I myself, Ārjōän, have not, in the three regions of the universe, any thing which is necessary for me to perform, nor any thing to obtain which is not obtained; and yet I live in the exercise of the moral duties. If I were not vigilantly to attend to these duties, all men would presently follow my example. If I were not to perform the moral actions, this world would fail in their duty; I should be the cause of spurious births, and should drive the people from the right way. As the ignorant perform the duties of life from the hope of reward, so the wise man, out of respect to the opinions and prejudices of mankind, should perform the same without motives of interest. He should not create a division in the understandings of the ignorant, who are inclined to outward works. The learned man, by industriously performing all the duties of life, should induce the vulgar to attend to them.

The man whose mind is led astray by the pride of self-sufficiency, thinketh that he himself is the executor of all those actions which are performed by the principles of his constitution. But the man who is acquainted with the nature of the two distinctions of cause and effect, having considered that principles will act according to their natures, giveth himself no trouble. Men who are led astray by the principles of their natures, are interested in the works of the faculties. The man who is acquainted with the whole, should not drive those from their works who are slow of comprehension, and less experienced than himself.

Throw every deed on me, and with a heart, over which the soul presideth, be free from hope, be unpresuming, be free from trouble, and resolve to fight.

\(^{19}\) Attained perfection.—That degree of perfection which is necessary to salvation.
Those who with a firm belief, and without reproach, shall constantly follow this my doctrine, shall be saved even by works; and know that those who, holding it in contempt, follow not this my counsel, are astrayed from all wisdom, deprived of reason, and are lost.

But the wise man also seeketh for that which is homogeneous to his own nature. All things act according to their natures, what then will restraint effect? In every purpose of the senses are fixed affection and dislike. A wise man should not put himself in their power, for both of them are his opponents. A man’s own religion, though contrary to, is better than the faith of another, let it be ever so well followed. It is good to die in one’s own faith, for another’s faith beareth fear.

Arjōon.

By what, O Kṛēśhnā, is man propelled to commit offences? He seems as if, contrary to his wishes, he was impelled by some secret force.

Kṛēśhnā

Know that it is the enemy lust, or passion, offspring of the carnal principle, insatiable and full of sin, by which this world is covered as the flame by the smoke, as the mirror by rust, or as the foetus by its membrane. The understanding of the wise man is obscured by this inveterate foe, in the shape of desire 20, who rageth like fire, and is hard to be appeased. It is said that the senses, the heart, and the understanding are the places where he delighteth most to rule. By the assistance of these he overwhelmeth reason, and stupifieth the soul. Thou shouldest, therefore, first subdue thy passions, and get the better of this sinful destroyer of wisdom and knowledge.

The organs are esteemed great, but the mind is greater than they.

20 Desire.—The will, as presiding over the organs, the heart and the understanding.
The Bhāgvāt-Gēētā

The resolution 21 is greater than the mind, and who is superior to the resolution is he 22. When thou hast resolved what is superior to the resolution, and fixed thyself by thyself, determine to abandon the enemy in the shape of desire, whose objects are hard to be accomplished.

21 The resolution.—In this place resolution means the power of distinguishing the truth of a proposition: the understanding.

22 He.—The soul, or universal spirit, of which the vital soul is supposed to be a portion.
Charles Wilkins
OF THE FORSAKING OF WORKS.

Krëēshnā.

This never-failing discipline I formerly taught unto Vēēvāśwāt, and Vēēvāśwāt communicated it to Mănŏō, and Mănŏō made it known unto Ėĕkšhwākŏŏ; and being delivered down from one unto another, it was studied by the Rājārśhēs; until at length, in the course of time, the mighty art was lost. It is even the same discipline which I have this day communicated unto thee, because thou art my servant and my friend. It is an ancient and a supreme mystery.

Ārjōōn.

Seeing thy birth is posterior to the life of Ėĕkšhwākŏŏ, how am I to understand that thou hadst been formerly the teacher of this doctrine?

Krëēshnā.

Both I and thou have passed many births. Mine are known unto me; but thou knowest not of thine.

Although I am not in my nature subject to birth or decay, and am the lord of all created being; yet having command over my own nature, I am made evident by my own power; and as often as there is a decline of virtue, and an insurrection of vice and injustice, in the world, I make myself evident; and thus I appear, from age to age, for the preservation of the just, the destruction of the wicked, and the establishment of virtue.

He, O Ārjōōn, who, from conviction, acknowledgest my divine birth and actions to be even so, doth not, upon his quitting his mortal frame, enter into another, for he entereth into me. Many who were free from affection, fear, and anger, and, filled with my spirit, depended upon me, having been purified by the power of wisdom, have entered into me. I assist those men who in all things walk in my path, even as they serve me.

Those who wish for success to their works in this life, worship the Dēvātās. That which is achieved in this life, from works, speedily cometh to pass. Mankind was created by me of four kinds, distinct in their principles, and in their duties. Know me then to be the creator of mankind, uncreated, and without decay.

Works affect not me, nor have I any expectations from the fruits of works. He who believeth me to be even so, is not bound by works. The ancients, who longed for eternal salvation, having discovered this, still performed works. Wherefore perform thou works, even as they were performed by the ancients in former times. The learned even are puzzled to determine what is work, and what is not. I will tell thee what that work is, by knowing which thou wilt be delivered from misfortune. It may be defined—action, improper action, and inaction. The path of action is full of darkness.

He who may behold, as it were, inaction in action, and action in inaction, is wise amongst mankind. He is a perfect performer of all duty.

Wise men call him a Pāndēēt, whose every undertaking is free from the idea of desire, and whose actions are consumed by the fire of wisdom. He abandoneth the desire of a reward of his actions; he is always contented and independent; and although he may be engaged in a work, he, as it were, doeth nothing. He is ins solicitous, of a subdued mind and spirit, and exempt from every perception; and, as he doeth only the offices of the body,

---

23 Worship the Dēvātās.—The word Dēvātā is synonymous with Dēv, Dēw or Dēb, as it is sometimes pronounced. The Angels, or subordinate celestial beings; all the attributes of the Deity; and every thing in Heaven and Earth which has been personified by the imagination of the Poets.
The Bhāgvāt-Gīētā

he committeth no offence. He is pleased with whatever he may by chance obtain; he hath gotten the better of duplicity, and he is free from envy. He is the same in prosperity and adversity; and although he acteth, he is not confined in the action. The work of him, who hath loft all anxiety for the event, who is freed from the bonds of action, and standeth with his mind subdued by spiritual wisdom, and who performeth it for the sake of worship, cometh altogether unto nothing. God is the gift of charity; God is the offering; God is in the fire of the altar; by God is the sacrifice performed; and God is to be obtained by him who maketh God alone the object of his works.

Some of the devout attend to the worship of the Dēvātās, or angels; others, with offerings, direct their worship unto God in the fire; others sacrifice their ears, and other organs, in the fire of constraint; whilst some sacrifice sound, and the like, in the fire of their organs. Some again sacrifice the actions of all their organs and faculties in the fire of self-constraint, lighted up by the spark of inspired wisdom. There are also the worshippers with offerings, and the worshippers with mortifications; and again the worshippers with enthusiastic devotion; so there are those, the wisdom of whose reading is their worship, men of subdued passions and severe manners. Some there are who sacrifice their breathing spirit, and force it downwards from its natural course; whilst others force the spirit which is below back with the breath; and a few, with whom these two faculties are held in great esteem, close up the door of each; and there are some, who eat but by rule, who sacrifice their lives in their lives. All these different kinds of worshippers are, by their particular modes of worship, purified from their offences. He who enjoyeth but the Āmrēētā which is left of his offerings, obtaineth the eternal spirit of Brāhm, the Supreme. This world is not for him who doth not worship; and where, O Ārjōōn, is there another?

And where, O Ārjōōn, is there another?—fit for him is understood. The sentence would perhaps read better in this form: “He who neglecteth the
A great variety of modes of worship like these are displayed in the mouth of God. Learn that they are all the offsprings of actions. Being convinced of this, thou shalt obtain an eternal release; for know that the worship of spiritual wisdom is far better than the worship with offerings of things. In wisdom is to be found every work without exception. Seek then this wisdom with prostrations, with questions, and with attention, that those learned men who see its principles may instruct thee in its rules; which having learnt, thou shalt not again, O son of Pāndōō, fall into folly; by which thou shalt behold all nature in the spirit; that is, in me 25 Although thou wert the greatest of all offenders, thou shalt be able to cross the gulf of sin with the bark of wisdom. As the natural fire, O Ārjōōn, reduceth the wood to ashes, so may the fire of wisdom reduce all moral actions to ashes. There is not any thing in this world to be compared with wisdom for purity. He who is perfected by practice, in due time findeth it in his own soul. He who hath faith findeth wisdom; and, above all, he who hath gotten the better of his passions; and having obtained this spiritual wisdom, he shortly enjoyeth superior happiness whilst the ignorant, and the man without faith, whose spirit is full of doubt, is lost. Neither this world, nor that which is above, nor happiness, can be enjoyed by the man of a doubting mind. The human actions have no power to confine the spiritual mind, which, by study, hath forsaken works, and which, by wisdom, hath cut asunder the bonds of doubt. Wherefore, O son of Bhārāt, resolve to cut asunder this doubt, offspring of ignorance, which hath taken possession of thy mind, with the edge of the wisdom of thy own soul, and arise and attach thyself to the discipline.

duties of life is not for this world, much less for that which is above” But the other translation is literally correct.

25  In me.—In the Deity, who is the universal spirit.

26  Have no power to confine.—Have no power to confine the soul to mortal birth.
The Bhāgvāt-Gēētā
Lecture V.

OF FORSAKING THE FRUITS OF WORKS.

Ārdjōōn.

Thou now speakest, O Kṛēēshnā, of the forsaking of works, and now again of performing them. Tell me positively which of the two is best.

Kṛēēshnā.

Both the desertion and the practice of works are equally the means of extreme happiness; but of the two the practice of works is to be distinguished above the desertion. The perpetual recluse, who neither longeth nor complaineth, is worthy to be known. Such a one is free from duplicity, and is happily freed from the bond of action. Children only, and not the learned, speak of the speculative and the practical doctrines as two. They are but one, for both obtain the self-fame end, and the place which is gained by the followers of the one, is gained by the followers of the other. That man seeth, who seeth that the speculative doctrines and the practical are but one. To be a Sānnyāsēē, or recluse, without application, is to obtain pain and trouble; whilst the Mōōnĕē, who is employed in the practice of his duty, presently obtaineth Brāhm, the Almighty. The man who, employed in the practice of works, is of a purified soul, a subdued spirit, and restrained passions, and whose soul is the universal soul, is not affected by so being. The attentive man, who is acquainted with the principles of things, in seeing, hearing, touching, smelling, eating, moving, sleeping, breathing, talking, quitting, taking, opening and closing his eyes, thinketh that he doeth nothing; but that the faculties are only employed in their several objects. The man who, performing the duties of life, and quitting all interest in them, placeth them upon Brāhm, the Supreme, is not tainted by sin; but remaineth like the leaf of the lotus unaffected by the waters. Practical men, who perform the offices of life but with their bodies, their minds, their understandings, and their senses, and forfake the consequence for the purification of their souls; and, although employed, forfake the fruit of action, obtain infinite happiness; whilst the man who is unemployed, being attached to the fruit by the agent desire, is in the bonds of confinement. The man who hath his passions in subjection, and with his mind forfake all works, his soul fitteth at rest in the nine-gate city of its abode 27, neither acting nor causing to act.

The Almighty createth neither the powers nor the deeds of mankind 28, nor the application of the fruits of action: nature prevaileth. The Almighty receiveth neither the vices nor the virtues of any one. Mankind are led astray by their reasons being obscured by ignorance; but when that ignorance of their souls is destroyed by the force of reason, their wisdom shineth forth again with the glory of the sun, and causeth the Deity to appear. Those whose understandings are in him, whose souls are in him, whose confidence is in him, and whose asylum is in him, are by wisdom purified from all their offences, and go from whence they shall never return.

The learned behold him alike in the reverend Brähmān perfected in knowledge, in the ox, and in the elephant; in the dog, and in him who eateth of the flesh of dogs. Those whose minds are fixed on this equality, gain eternity even in this world. They put their trust in Brähm, the Eternal, because he is everywhere alike, free from fault.

The man who knoweth Brähm, and confideth in Brähm, and whose mind is steady and free from folly, should neither rejoice in 27 In the nine-gate city of its abode.—The body, as furnished with nine passages for the action of the faculties: the eyes, nose, mouth, &c.

28 The powers nor the deeds of mankind.—To understand this, and many similar passages, it is necessary to be apprized that the Hindoos believe that all our actions, whether good or evil, arise from the inherent qualities of the principles of our constitutions.
prosperity, nor complain in adversity. He whose soul is unaffected by the impressions made upon the outward feelings, obtaineth what is pleasure in his own mind. Such an one, whose soul is thus fixed upon the study of Brāhm, enjoyeth pleasure without decline. The enjoyments which proceed from the feelings are as the wombs of future pain. The wise man, who is acquainted with the beginning and the end of things, delighteth not in these. He who can bear up against the violence which is produced from lust and anger in this mortal life, is properly employed and a happy man. The man who is happy in his heart, at rest in his mind, and enlightened within, is a Yōgēē, or one devoted to God, and of a godly spirit; and obtaineth the immaterial nature of Brāhm, the Supreme. Such Rĕĕshĕĕs as are purified from their offences, freed from doubt, of subdued minds, and interested in the good of all mankind, obtain the incorporeal Brāhm. The incorporeal Brāhm is prepared, from the beginning, for such as are free from lust and anger, of humble minds and subdued spirits, and who are acquainted with their own souls.

The man who keepeth the outward accidents from entering his mind, and his eyes fixed in contemplation between his brows; who maketh the breath to pass through both his nostrils alike in expiration and inspiration; who is of subdued faculties, mind, and understanding, and hath set his heart upon salvation; and who is free from lust, fear, and anger, is for ever blessed in this life; and, being convinced that I am the cherisher of religious zeal, the lord of all worlds, and the friend of all nature, he shall obtain me and be blessed.
Lecture VI.

Of the Exercise of Soul.

Krĕēshnă.

He is both a Yōgēē and a Sănnyăsēē who performeth that which he hath to do independent of the fruit thereof; not he who liveth without the sacrificial fire and without action. Learn O son of Păndōō, that what they call Sănnyās, or a forfaking of the world, is the same with Yōg or the practice of devotion. He cannot be a Yōgēē, who, in his actions, hath not abandoned all intentions. Works are said to be the means by which a man who wisheth, may attain devotion; so rest is called the means for him who hath attained devotion. When the all-contemplative Sănnyăsēē is not engaged in the objects of the senses, nor in works, then he is called one who hath attained devotion. He should raise himself by himself: he should not suffer his soul to be depressed. Self is the friend of self; and, in like manner, self is its own enemy. Self is the friend of him by whom the spirit is subdued with the spirit; so self, like a foe, delighteth in the enmity of him who hath no soul. The soul of the placid conquered spirit is the same collected in heat and cold, in pain and pleasure, in honor and disgrace. The man whose mind is replete with divine wisdom and learning, who standeth upon the pinnacle, and hath subdued his passions, is said to be devout. To the Yōgēē, gold, iron, and stones, are the same. The man is distinguished whose resolutions, whether amongst his companions and friends; in the midst of enemies, or those who stand aloof or go between; with those who love and those who hate; in the company of saints or sinners, is the same.

The Yōgēē constantly exerciseth the spirit in private. He is recluse, of a subdued mind and spirit; free from hope, and free from perception. He planteth his own seat firmly on a spot that is undefiled, neither too high nor too low, and sitteth upon the sacred grass which is called Kŏŏs, covered with a skin and a cloth. There he, whose business is the restraining of his passions, should fit, with his mind fixed on one object alone, in the exercise of his devotion for the purification of his soul, keeping his head, his neck, and body, steady without motion, his eyes fixed on the point of his nose, looking at no other place around. The peaceful soul, released from fear, who would keep in the path of one who followeth God, should restrain the mind, and, fixing it on me, depend on me alone.
The Yōgēe of an humbled mind, who thus constantly exerciseth his soul, obtaineth happiness incorporeal and supreme in me.

This divine discipline, Ārjōon, is not to be attained by him who eateth more than enough, or less than enough; neither by him who hath a habit of sleeping much, nor by him who sleepeth not at all. The discipline which destroyeth pain belongeth to him who is moderate in eating and in recreation, whose inclinations are moderate in action, and who is moderate in sleep. A man is called devout when his mind remaineth thus regulated within himself, and he is exempt from every lust and inordinate desire.
The Yōgēe of a subdued mind, thus employed in the exercise of his devotion, is compared to a lamp, standing in a place without wind, which waveth not. He delighteth in his own soul, where the mind, regulated by the service of devotion, is pleased to dwell, and where, by the assistance of the spirit, he beholdeth the soul. He becometh acquainted with that boundless pleasure which is far more worthy of the understanding than that which ariseth from the senses; depending upon which, the mind moveth not from its principles; which having obtained, he respecteth no other acquisition so great as it; in which depending, he is not moved by the severest pain. This disjunction from the conjunction of pain may be distinguished by the appellation Yōg, spiritual union or devotion.
It is to be attained by resolution, by the man who knoweth his own mind. When he hath abandoned every desire that ariseth from the imagination, and subdued with his mind every inclination of the senses, he may, by degrees, find rest; and having, by a steady resolution, fixed his mind within himself, he should think of nothing else. Wheresoever the unsteady mind roameth, he should subdue it, bring it back, and place it in his own breast. Supreme happiness attendeth the man whose mind is thus at peace; whose carnal affections and passions are thus subdued; who is thus in God, and free from sin. The man who is thus constantly in the exercise of the soul, and free from sin, enjoyeth eternal happiness, united with Brāhma the Supreme. The man whose mind is endued with this devotion, and looketh on all things alike, beholdeth the supreme soul. He who beheldeth me in all things, and beholdeth all things in me, I forsoak not him, and he forsoaketh not me. The Yōgē who believeth in unity, and worshippeth me present in all things, dwelleth in me in all respects, even whilst he liveth. The man, O Ārjōon, who, from what passeth in his own breast, whether it be pain or pleasure, beholdeth the same in others, is esteemed a supreme Yōgē.

Ārjōon.

From the restlessness of our natures, I conceive not the permanent duration of this doctrine of equality which thou hast told me. The mind, O Krēēshnā, is naturally unsteady, turbulent, strong, and stubborn. I esteem it as difficult to restrain as the wind.

Krēēshnā.

The mind, O valiant youth, is undoubtedly unsteady, and difficult to be confined; yet, I think it may be restrained by practice and temperance. In my opinion, this divine discipline which is called Yōg is hard to be attained by him who hath not his soul in subjection; but it may be acquired by him who taketh pains, and hath his soul in his own power.

Ārjōon.

Whither, O Krēēshnā, doth the man go after death, who, although he be endued with faith, hath not obtained perfection in his devotion, because his unsubdued mind wandered from the discipline? Doth not the fool who is found not standing in the path of Brāhm, and is thus, as it were, fallen between good and evil, like a broken cloud, come to nothing? Thou, Krēēshnā, canst entirely clear up these my doubts; and there is no other person to be found able to remove these difficulties.

Krēēshnā.

His destruction is found neither here nor in the world above. No man who hath done good goeth unto an evil place. A man whose devotionst have been broken off by death, having enjoyed for an immensity of years the rewards of his virtues in the regions above, at length is born again in some holy and respectable family; or perhaps in the house of some learned Yōgēē. But such a regeneration into this life is the most difficult to attain. Being thus born again, he is endued with the same degree of application and advancement of his understanding that he held in his former body; and here he begins again to labour for perfection in devotion. The man who is desirous of learning this devotion, this spiritual application of the soul, exceedeth even the word of Brāhm. The Yōgēē who, labouring with all his might, is purified of his offences, and, after many births, made perfect, at length goeth to the supreme abode. The Yōgēē is more exalted than Tāpāswēēs, those zealots who harass themselves in performing penances, respected above the learned in science, and superior to those who are attached to moral works; wherefore, O Ārjōōn, resolve thou to become a Yōgēē. Of all Yōgēēs, I respect him as the most devout, who hath faith in me, and who serveth me with a soul possessed of my spirit.

29 The man, &c.—i. e. That the desire of becoming a devout man is equal to the study of the Vēds.
Hear, O Ārjōōn, how having thy mind attached to me, being in the exercise of devotion, and making me alone thy asylum, thou wilt, at once, and without doubt, become acquainted with me. I will instruct thee in this wisdom and learning without reserve; which having learnt, there is not in this life any other that is taught worthy to be known.

A few amongst ten thousand mortals strive for perfection; and but a few of those who strive and become perfect, know me according to my nature. My principle is divided into eight distinctions: earth, water, fire, air, and æther (Khāng); together with mind, understanding, and Āhāng-kār, (self-consciousness): but besides this, know that I have another principle distinct from this, and superior, which is of a vital nature, and by which this world is supported. Learn that these two are the womb of all nature. I am the creation and the dissolution of the whole universe. There is not any thing greater than I; and all things hang on me, even as precious gems upon a string. I am moisture in the water, light in the sun and moon, invocation in the Vēds, found in the firmament, human nature in mankind, sweet-smelling savour in the earth, glory in the source of light; in all things I am life, and I am zeal in the zealous; and know, O Ārjōōn, that I am the eternal seed of all nature. I am the understanding of the wise, the glory of the proud, the strength of the strong, free from lust and anger; and in animals I am desire regulated by moral fitness. But know that I am not in those natures which are of the three qualities called Sātwā, Rajā, 30 Of a vital nature.—The vital soul. 31 Learn that these two.—Matter and spirit.
and Tămă 32, although they proceed from me: yet they are in me. The whole of this world being bewildered by the influence of these three-fold qualities, knoweth not that I am distinct from these and without decline. This my divine and supernatural power, endued with these principles and properties, is hard to be overcome. They who come unto me get the better of this supernatural influence. The wicked, the foolifh and the low-minded come not unto me, because their understandings, being bewildered by the supernatural power, they truft in the principles of evil spirits.

I am, O Ārjōon, served by four kinds of people who are good: the diſtreſned, the inquiſitive, the wiſhers after wealth 33, and the wife. But of all these the wiſe man, who is constantly engaged in my service, and is a servant but of one, is the moſt diſtinguiſhed. I am extremely dear to the wiſe man, and he is dear unto me. All these are exalted; but I eſteem the wiſe man even as myſelf, because his devout ſpirit dependeth upon me alone as his ultimate reſource. The wiſe man procedeth not unto me until after many births; for the exalted mind, who believeth that the ſon of Văsŏŏdēv is all, is hard to be found. Thoſe whose understandings are drawn away by this and that pursuit, go unto other Dēvătăs. They depen upon this and that rule of conduct, and are governed by their own principles 34. Whatever image any ſupplicant is deſirous of worſhipping in faith, it is I alone who inſpire him with that ſteady faith; with which being endued, he endeavoureth to render that image propitious, and at length he obtaineth the object of his wiſhes as it is appointed by me. But the reward of ſuch ſhort-ſighted men is finite. Thoſe who worſhip the Dēvătăs go unto them, and thoſe who worſhip me alone go unto me. The ignorant, being unacquainted with my ſupreme nature, which is 32 Sătwă, Răjă, Tămă.—Truth, passiôn, darkneſs; or, as the words are ſometimes uſed, white, red, black.

33 The wiſhers after wealth.—Such as pray for worldly endowments.
34 And are governed by their own principles.—By the three ruling qualities already explained.
superior to all things, and exempt from decay, believe me, who am invisible, to exist in the visible form under which they see me.
I am not visible to all, because I am concealed by the supernatural power that is in me. The ignorant world do not discover this, that I am not subject to birth or decay. I know, O Ārjōn, all the beings that have passed, all that are present, and all that shall hereafter be; but there is not one among them who knoweth me. All beings in birth find their reason fascinated and perplexed by the wiles of contrary sensations, arising from love and hatred. Those men of regular lives, whose sins are done away, being freed from the fascination arising from those contending passions, enjoy me.
They who put their trust in me, and labour for a deliverance from decay and death, know Brāhm, the whole Ādhē-ātma, and every Kārmā. The devout souls who know me to be the Ādhē-bhōt, the Ādhē-dīvā, and the Ādhē-yāgnā, know me also in the time of their departure.
Charles Wilkins
Lecture VIII.

Of Pōōrōōsh.

Ārjōŏn.

What is that Brāhm? What is Ādhēē-ātmā? What is Kārmā, O firſt of men? What alſo is Ādhēē-bhōōt called? What Ādhēē-divā? How is Ādhēē-yāgnā, and who is here in this body? How art thou to be known in the hour of departure by men of ſubdued minds?

Krēēshnā.

Brāhm is that which is ſupreme and without corruption; Ādhēē-ātmā 35 is Swā-bhāb or particular conſtitution, diſpoſition, quality, or nature; Kārmā is that emanation from which proceedeth the generation of natural beings; Ādhēē-bhōōt is the deſtroying nature; Ādhēē-divā is Pōōrōōsh; and Ādhēē-yāgnā, or ſuperintendent of worſhip, is myſelf in this body. At the end of time, he, who having abandoned his mortal frame, departeth thinking only of me, without doubt goeth unto me; of elſe, whatever other 35 Ādhēē-ātmā, &c.—Krēēśnā’s anſwer to the ſeveral queſtions of Ārjōŏn has ſomething myſterious in it, I will endeavour to render it more comprehenſible:

Ādhēē-ātmā—literally ſignifies the over-ruling ſpirit, by which is implied the divine nature.
Kārmā—ſignifies action, whereby is to be underſtood his creative quality.
Ādhēē-bhōōt—ſignifies he who ruleth over created beings: the power of the Deity to deſtroy.
Ādhēē-divā—literally means ſuperior to fate; and is explained by the word Pōōrōōsh, which, in vulgar language, means no more than man; but in this work it is a term in theology ufed to expres the vital ſoul, or portion of the univerſal ſpirit of Brāhm inhabiting a body. So by the word Māhā-Pōōrōōsh is implied the Deity as the primordial ſource. These terms are ufed in a metaphyſical work called Pātănjăl, wherein God is represented under the figure of Māhā-Pōōrōōsh, the great man or prime progenitor; in conjunction with Prăkrēētēē, nature or firſt principle, under the emblem of a female engendering the world with his Māyā or supernatural power.
nature he shall call upon, at the end of life, when he shall quit his mortal shape, he shall ever go unto it. Wherefore at all times think of me alone and fight. Let thy mind and understanding be placed in me alone, and thou shalt, without doubt, go unto me. The man who longeth after the Divine and Supreme Being, with his mind intent upon the practice of devotion, goeth unto him. The man who shall in the last hour call up the ancient Prophet, the prime director, the most minute atom, the preserver of all things, whose countenance is like the sun, and who is distinct from darkness, with a steady mind attached to his service, with the force of devotion, and his whole soul fixed between his brows, goeth unto that divine Supreme Being, who is called Pārām-Pōŏrŏŏsh.

I will now summarily make thee acquainted with that path which the doctors of the Vēds call never-failing; which the men of subdued minds and conquered passions enter; and which, desirous of knowing, they live the lives of Brāhmā-chārēēs or godly pilgrims. He who, having closed up all the doors of his faculties, locked up his mind in his own breast, and fixed his spirit in his head, standing firm in the exercise of devotion, repeating in silence ओम! the mystic sign of Brāhm, thence called “Ekākṣhăr,” shall, on his quitting this mortal frame calling upon me, without doubt go the journey of supreme happiness. He who thinketh constantly of me, his mind undiverted by another object, I will at all times be easily found by that constant adherent to devotion; and those elevated souls, who have thus attained supreme perfection, come unto me, and are no more born in the finite mansion of pain and sorrow. Know, O Ārjōŏn, that all the regions between this and the abode of Brāhm afford but a transient residence; but he who findeth me, returneth not again to mortal birth.

36 ओम!—The mystic emblem of the Deity is forbidden to be pronounced but in silence. It is a syllable formed of the letters ए ṍ ओ, which in composition coalesce, and make ओे Ṭ, and the nasal consonant म m. The first letter stands for the Creator, the second for the Preserver, and the third for the Destroyer.
They who are acquainted with day and night, know that the day of Brähmā is as a thousand revolutions of the Yōogs, and that his night extendeth for a thousand more. On the coming of that day, all things proceed from invisibility to visibility; so, on the approach of night, they are all dissolved away in that which is called invisible. The universe, even having existed, is again dissolved; and now again, on the approach of day, by divine necessity, it is reproduced. That which, upon the dissolution of all things else, is not destroyed, is superior and of another nature from that visibility: it is invisible and eternal. He who is thus called invisible and incorruptible, is even he who is called the Supreme Abode; which men having once obtained, they never more return to earth: that is my mansion. That Supreme Being is to be obtained by him who worshippeth no other Gods. In him is included all nature; by him all things are spread abroad.

I will now speak to thee of that time in which, should a devout man die, he will never return; and of that time, in which dying, he shall return again upon the earth.

Those holy men who are acquainted with Brähm, departing this life in the fiery light of day, in the bright season of the moon, within the six months of the sun’s northern course, go unto him; but those who depart in the gloomy night of the moon’s dark season, and whilst the sun is yet within the southern path of his journey, ascend for a while into the regions of the moon, and again return to mortal birth. These two, light and darkness, are esteemed the world’s eternal ways: he who walketh in the former path returneth not; whilst the who walketh in the latter cometh back again upon the earth. A Yōgēē, who is acquainted with these two paths of

A thousand revolutions of the Yōogs.—Is equal to 4320,000,000 years. An ingenious mathematician, who is now in India, supposeth that these Yōogs are nothing more than astronomical periods formed from the coincidence of certain cycles, of which those of the precession of the equinoxes and the moon are two. The word Yōg, which signifies a juncture or joining, gives good grounds for such an hypothesis.
Charles Wilkins

action, will never be perplexed; wherefore, O Ārjōṅ, be thou at all times employed in devotion. The fruit of this surpasseth all the rewards of virtue pointed out in the Vēds, in worshippings, in mortifications, and even in the gifts of charity. The devout Yōgēē, who knoweth all this, shall obtain a supreme and prior place.
I will now make known unto thee, who findest no fault, a most mysterious secret, accompanied by profound learning, which having studied thou shalt be delivered from misfortune. It is a sovereign art, a sovereign mystery, sublime and immaculate; clear unto the sight, virtuous, inexhaustible, and easy to be performed. Those who are infidels to this faith, not finding me, return again into this world, the mansion of death.

This whole world was spread abroad by me, in my invisible form. All things are dependent on me, and I am not dependent on them; and all things are not dependent on me. Behold my divine connection! My creative spirit is the keeper of all things, not the dependent. Understand that all things rest in me, as the mighty air, which passes every where, resteth for ever in the ætherial space. At the end of the period Kălp all things, O son of Kōōntēē, return into my primordial source, and at the beginning of another Kălp I create them all again. I plant myself on my own nature, and create, again and again, this assemblage of beings, the whole, from the power of nature, without power. Those works confine not me, because I am like one who sitteth aloof uninterested in those works. By my supervision nature produceth both the moveable 38 And all things are not dependent on me.—This ambiguity is removed by the following simile of the air in the æther.

39 Kălp.—The same as the day of Brăhmā, a thousand revolutions of the Yŏŏgs. The word literally signifies formation.
40 The whole, from the power of nature, without power.—This passage is agreeable to the doctrine of the influence of the three Gŏŏn, or qualities, over all our actions.
and the immoveable. It is from this source ⁴¹, O Āṛjōōn, that the universe revolveth.

The foolish, being unacquainted with my supreme and divine nature, as lord of all things, despise me in this human form, trusting to the evil, diabolic, and deceitful principle within them. They are of vain hope, of vain endeavours, of vain wisdom, and void of reason; whilst men of great minds, trusting to their divine natures, discover that I am before all things and incorruptible, and serve me with their hearts undiverted by other Gods ⁴².

Men of rigid and laborious lives come before me humbly bowing down, for ever glorifying my name; and they are constantly employed in my service; but others serve me, worshipping me, whose face is turned on all sides, with the worship, unitedly, separately, in various shapes. I am the sacrifice; I am the worship; I am the spices; I am the invocation; I am the ceremony to the manes of the ancestors; I am the provisions; I am the fire, and I am the victim: I am the father and the mother of this world, the grandfire, and the preserver. I am the holy one worthy to be known; the mystic figure Ōm; the Rĕĕk, the Sām, and Yăjŏōr Vēds ⁴³. I am the journey of the good; the comforter; the creator; the witness; the resting-place; the asylum, and the friend. I am generation and dissolution; the place where all things are reposited, and the inexhaustible seed of all nature. I am sunshine, and I am rain; I now draw in, and now let forth. I am death and immortality: I am entity and non-entity.

The followers of the three Vēds, who drink of the juice of the Sōm

---

⁴¹ It is from this source.—Because of the supervision of the Supreme Being.
⁴² Other Gods.—Wherever the word Gods is used in this Translation, the subordinate supernatural beings are implied.
⁴³ Vēds.—The word Vēd signifies learning. The sacred volumes of the Hindoos, of which there are four, supposed to have been revealed from the four mouths of Brāhmā. It is remarkable that Krēēfnā mentions only the three first; it may therefore be presumed that no more existed in his time.
The Bhāgvat-Gēētā

being purified of their offences, address me in sacrifices, and petition for heaven. These obtain the regions of Eĕndrā, the prince of celestial food and divine enjoyments; and when they have partaken of that spacious heaven for a while, in proportion to their virtues, they sink again into this mortal life, as soon as their stock of virtue is expended. In this manner those, who, longing for the accomplishment of their wishes, follow the religion pointed out by the three Vēds, obtain a transient reward. But those who, thinking of no other, serve me alone, I bear the burthen of the devotion of those who are thus constantly engaged in my service. They also who serve other Gods with a firm belief, in doing so, involuntarily worship even me. I am he who partaketh of all worship, and I am their reward. Because mankind are unacquainted with my nature, they fall again from heaven. Those who worship the Dēvātās go unto the Dēvātās; the worshippers of the Pĕĕtrĕĕs, or patriarchs, go unto the Pĕĕtrĕĕs; the servants of the Bhōōts, or spirits, go unto the Bhōōts; and they who worship me go unto me.

I accept and enjoy the holy offerings of the humble soul, who in his worship presenteth leaves and flowers and fruit and water unto me. Whatever thou doest, O Ārjŏŏn, whatever thou eatest, whatever thou sacrificest, whatever thou givest, whatever thou shalt be zealous about, make each an offering unto me. Thou shalt thus be delivered with good and evil fruits, and with the bonds of works. Thy mind being joined in the practice of a Sănnyāsēē, thou shalt come unto me. I am the same to all mankind: there 44 Sōm—is the name of a creeper, the juice of which is commanded to be drank at the conclusion of a sacrifice, by the person for whom and at whose expense it is performed, and by the Brāhmāns who officiate at the altar.

45 Eĕndrā—is a personification of the visible heavens, or the power of the Almighty over the elements. He is the sprinkler of the rain, the roller of the thunder, and director of the winds. He is represented with a thousand eyes, grasping the thunderbolt.
46 Sănnyāsēē—one who totally forfaketh all worldly actions; but Krĕĕšhnă, in order to unite the various religious opinions which prevailed in those days, confines the word Sănnyās to a forfaking of the hope of reward.
is not one who is worthy of my love or hatred. They who serve me with adoration, I am in them, and they in me. If one, whose ways are ever so evil, serve me alone, he is as respectable as the just man; he is altogether well employed; he soon becometh of a virtuous spirit, and obtaineth eternal happiness. Recollect, O son of Kōontēē, that my servant doth not perish. Those even who may be of the womb of sin; women 47; the tribes of Vīṣyā and Sō̄drā; shall go the supreme journey, if they take sanctuary with me; how much more my holy servants the Brāhmāns and the Rājārshēēs 48! Consider this world as a finite and joyless place, and serve me. Be of my mind, my servant, my adorer, and bow down before me. Unite thy soul, as it were, unto me, make me thy asylum, and thou shalt go unto me.

47 Women.—In the Vēds it is declared, that the souls of women, and of the inferior tribes, are doomed to transmigration till they can be regenerated in the body of a Brāhmān.

48 Rājārshēēs—from Rājā and Rēēshēē, Prince and Saint.
Lecture X.

Krĕĕshnă.

Hear again, O valiant youth, my suprême words, which I will speak unto thee, who art well pleased, because I am anxious for thy welfare.

Neither the hofts of Sŏŏrs ⁴⁹, nor the Măhărſhĕĕs ⁵⁰, know of my birth; because I am before all the Dēvătăs and Măhărſhĕĕs. Whofo, free from folly, knoweth me to be without birth, before all things, and the mighty ruler of the univerſe, he shall, amongst mortals, be saved with all his transgressions. The various qualities incident to natural beings, such as reafon, knowledge, unembarraſſed judgment, patience, truth, humility, meekneſs, pleafure and pain; birth and death, fear and courage; mercy, equality, galdneſs, charity, zeal, renown and infamy, all distinctly come from me. So in former days the ſeven Măhărſhĕĕs and the four Mănŏŏs ⁵¹ who are of my nature, were born of my mind, of whom are descended all the inhabitants of the earth. He who knoweth this my diſtinction and my connection, according to their principles, is without doubt endued with an unerring devotion. I am the creator of all things, and all things proceed from me. Thoſe who are endued with spiritual wiſdom, believe this and worship me: their very hearts and minds are in me; they rejoice amongst themselves, and delight in fpaking of my name, and teaching one another my doctrine. I gladly inſpire thoſe, who are constantly employed in ⁴⁹ Sŏŏrs.—Good angels.

⁵⁰ Măhărſhĕĕs.—Great ſaints, of whom there are reckoned seven, who were at the creation produced from the mind of Brăhmă.
⁵¹ Mănŏŏs.—Four other beings produced at the creation from the mind of Brăhmă.
my service, with that use of reason, by which they come unto me; and, in compassion, I stand in my own nature, and dissipate the darkness of their ignorance with the light of the lamp of wisdom.

Ārjōōn.

All the Rēēshēēs, the Dēvārshēēs, and the prophet Nārād, call thee the supreme Brāhm; the supreme abode; the most high; the most high God; the eternal Pōōrōōh, the divine being before all other Gods, without birth, the mighty Lord! Thus say Āsēētā, Dēvālā, Vyās, and thou thyself haft told me so; and I firmly believe, O Kēsāvā, all thou tellest me. Neither the Dēws nor the Dānŏōs are acquainted, O Lord, with thy appearance. Thou alone, O first of men! knowest thy own spirit; thou, who art the production of all nature, the ruler of all things, the God of Gods, and the universal Lord! Thou art now able to make me acquainted with those divine portions of thyself, by which thou possessest and dwellest in this world. How shall I, although I constantly think of thee, be able to know thee? In what particular natures art thou to be found? Tell me again in full what is thy connection, and what thy distinction; for I am not yet satisfied with drinking of the living water of thy words.

Krēēshnā.

Blessings be upon thee! I will make thee acquainted with the chief of my divine distinctions, as the extent of my nature is infinite.

I am the soul which standeth in the bodies of all beings. I am the 52 Rēēshēēs.—Saints.

---

53 Dēvārshēēs.—Deified saints.
54 Nārād.—One of the Dēvārshēēs, and a great Prophet, who is supposed to be still wandering about the world. Nārā signifies a thread or clew, a precept; and Dā Giver.—Wherever he appears he is constantly employed in giving good counsel.
55 Dānŏōs.—Evil spirits, or fallen angels, the offspring of Dănō (fem).
56 O first of men!—Ārjōōn makes use of this expression as addressing the Deity in human shape.
The Bhāgvat-Gēētā

beginning, the middle, and the end of all things. Amongst the Ādēettyās 57 I am Vēĕſhnŏ 58, and the radiant Răvee 59 amongst the ſtars; I am Mărēēchĕ 60 amongst the Mărŏŏts 61 and Săsēē 62 amongst the Năkſhătrăs 63; amongst the Vēds I am the Sām 64, and I am Văsăvă 65 amongst the Dēws. Amongst the faculties I am the mind, and amongst animals I am reaſon. I am Sănkăr 66 amongst the Rŏŏdrăs 67, and Veĕttēsă 68 amongst the Yăkſhăs and the Răkſhăs. I am Pāvāk 69 amongst the Văsŏŏs 70 and Mĕĕrō 71 amongst the ſubſcribing mountains. Amongſt teachers know that I am their chief Vrĕĕhăſpătĕĕ 72; amongſt warriors I am Skăndă 73; and amongſt 57 Ādēettyās.—The offſprings of Ādētĕĕ (f.) (that may not be cut off.) There are reckoned twelve, and are nothing more than emblems of the ſun for each month of the year. Their names are Vărŏŏn, Sōōryă, Vēdāng, Bhānŏŏ, Eĕndră, Răvĕĕ, Găbhăſtĕĕ, Yăm, Swărnă‑rētă, Dĕĕvākăr, Mĕĕtră, Vēĕſhnŏ. 58 Vēĕſhnŏ.—He who filleth or poſſeſseth all ſpace. One of the twelve ſuns, and the name of the Deity in his preſerving quality. 59 Răvee.—The riſer—one of the names of the ſun. 60 Mărēēchĕ.—One of the eight points of the heavens. 61 Mărŏŏts.—The winds. 62 Săsēē—The moon. 63 Năkſhătrăs.—Diſpellers of darkneſs. The 18 constellations through which the moon paſſes in its monthly courſe. Constellations in general. 64 Sām.—The firſt of the four books of the Vēds, compoſed to be chanted or fung. 65 Văsăvă.—One of the names of Eĕndră. 66 Sănkăr.—One of the names of Sĕĕv, or Fate. 67 Rŏŏdrăs.—Eleven diſtinctions of Sĕĕv, or Fate. 68 Veĕttēsă.—The God of riches, otherwiſe called Kŏŏvēr. He is ſaid to preſide over the regions of the north, and to be the chief of the Yăkſhăs and the Răkſhăs, two ſpecies of good and evil Genii. 69 Pāvāk.—The God of fire. He is ſuppoſed to preſide over the ſoutheaſt quarter. 70 Văsŏŏs. Eight of the firſt created Beings of Brăhmā. 71 Mĕĕrō.—The north pole of the terreſtrial globe, fabled by the poets to be the higheſt mountain in the world. It is ſometimes, by way of pre-eminence, called Sŏo‑mērŏŏ. It is remarkable that the word Mĕĕrō ſignifies a centre or axis. 72 Vrĕĕhăſpătĕĕ.—The preceptor of the Dēvs or Dēws, the planet Jupiter and Dies Jovis. 73 Skăndă.—Otherwiſe called Kărtĕĕk, the general of the celeſtial armies.
floods I am the ocean. I am Bhrēgŏ 74 amongst the Māhārśhēēs, and I am the monosyllable 75 amongst words. I am amongst worships the Yāp 76 or silent worship, and amongst immovable the mountain Hēēmālāy 77. Of all the trees of the forest I am the Āfwāţthā 78, and of all the Dēvārśhēēs I am Narād. I am Chēētră-răth amongst Gāndhārvs 79 and the Mōōnēē Kăpēēl amongst the saints. Know that amongst horses I am Oŏchīsărăvă, who arose with the Āmrēētă from out the ocean 80. Amongst elephants I am Irāvăt, and the sovereign amongst men. Amongst weapons I am the Vājra or thunderbolt, and amongst cattle the cow Kāmā‑dhŏŏk 81. I am the prolific Kăndărp the God of love; and amongst serpents I am Vāsōŏkēē their chief. I am Ānăntă amongst the Nāgs 82, and Vărrōōn 74 Bhrēgŏ. — One of the first created beings produced from the mind of Brāhmā.

75 The Monosyllable. — The mystic word or monosyllable Ṣvā Om! already explained.
76 Yāp. — A silent repetition of the name of God.
77 Hēēmālāy. — The chain of snowy mountains which divide India from Tartary, and which, from the immense distance they may be seen, are supposed to be as high as any upon the face of the globe.
78 Āfwāţthā. — The Pēēpăl tree.
79 Chēētră-răth amongst Gāndhārvs. — The title of chief of the Gāndharvs or celestial choirs: the Gāndharv of the painted chariot. In the Māhābhēērăt is to be found a very entertaining story of a combat between him and Ārjōōn, wherein he is defeated; and, his painted chariot being destroyed by a fiery arrow shot from the bow of his opponent, he resolves to change his name to Dăgdhă‑răth, or the Gāndhārv of the burnt chariot.
80 Oŏchīsărăvă, who arose with the Āmrēētă, or the water of life, from the ocean. — The story of churning the ocean for what are called the Chowdă Răttăn, or fourteen jewels, is of such a curious nature, and, in some parts, bears such a wonderful affinity to Milton’s description of the war in heaven, that the Translator thinks it will afford the reader an agreeable contrast to the subject of this work, and serve as a further specimen of his version of the Māhābhēērăt, from which both are extracted.
81 Kāmā‑dhŏŏk. — One of the names of the Cow of Plenty, produced in churning the ocean.
82 Ānăntă amongst the Nāgs. — The Nāgs are serpents fabled with many heads. Ānăntă signifies eternal, and may be an emblem of eternity. There are some amongst the inhabitants of the waters. I am Aryāmā amongst the Pĕĕtrĕĕs, and I am Yām amongst all those who rule. Amongst the Dītyās (evil spirits) I am Prăhlād, an Kāl (time) amongst computations. Amongst beasts I am the king of beasts, and Vinātēyā amongst the feathered tribe. Amongst purifiers I am Pāvān the air, and Rām amongst those who carry arms. Amongst fishes I am the Mākăr, and amongst rivers I am Gāngā the daughter of Jāhnōō. Of things transient I am the beginning, the middle, and the end. Of all science I am the knowledge of the ruling spirit, and of all speaking I am the oration. Amongst letters I am the vowel a, and of all compound words I am the Dwăndwă. I am also never-failing time; the preserver, whose face is turned on all sides. I am all-grasping death; and I am the resurrection of those who are about to be. Amongst fœminines I am fame, fortune, eloquence, memory, understanding, fortitude, patience. Amongst harmonious measures I am the Gāyătrēē, and amongst Sāms I am the Vrēĕhăt Sām. Amongst the months I am the month very wonderful stories told of these serpents in the original from which these Dialogues are taken.
The Bhāgvāt-Gēētā

83 Vărŏŏn.—The God of the Ocean.
84 Yām.—The judge of hell.
85 Prăhlād.—An evil spirit who was converted by Krĕĕſhnă.
86 Vinātēyā.—A bird fabled to be of wonderful size, and the vehicle of Vĕĕſhnŏŏ, the Deity in his preserving quality, and who is otherwise called Gărŏŏr.
87 Mākăr.—A fish represented with a long snout something like the proboscis of an elephant; and the sign Carpicornus.
88 Gāngā.—The Ganges. When the river was first conducted from its source, by a Prince whose name was Bhāgēērăth, towards the ocean, it so fell out that Jāhnōō was at his devotions at the mouth of the Mahanadee, at a place now called Navobhunge.—the Goddess in passing swept away the utensils for his ablution, which so enraged him that he drank up her stream; but after a while his anger was appeased, and he let her escape from an incision made in his thigh; and from this circumstance of her second birth, she was afterwards called Jāhnăvēē, or the offspring of Jāhnōō.
89 Dwăndwă.—A term in grammar, used where many nouns are put together without a copulative, and the case subjoined to the last only, which is a mode of composition much admired by the Poets.
The month beginning with the middle of October, when the periodical rains have subsided, and the excessive heats are abated.

The seaon of flowers, otherwise called Văsănt. The two months between the middle of March and May.—The Hindoos divide the year into six Rĕĕtŏŏ, or seaons, of two months each, which are thus denominated: Sĕĕsăr.—Dewy seaon.
Hĕĕmănt.—Cold seaon.
Văsănt.—Mild (spring).
Grĕšhmă.—Hot seaon.
Vărsă.—Rainy seaon.
Sărăt.—Breaking (up of the rains).

The father of Krĕĕșhnă in his incarnation.

The reputed author or compiler of the Măhābhārăt.
The Poets of India, like the Bards of Britain, were revered as Saints and Prophets Otherwise called Sŏŏkră, esteemed the preceptor of the evil spirits; the planet Venus, and dies Veneris.

Lecture XI.

Display of the Divine Nature in the Form of the Universe.

Arjōon.

This supreme mystery, distinguished by the name of the \textit{Adhēē-ātmā} or ruling spirit, which, out of loving-kindness, thou hast made known unto me, hath dissipated my ignorance and perplexity. I have heard from thee a full account of the creation and destruction of all things, and also of the mightiness of thy inexhaustible spirit. It is even as thou hast described thyself, O mighty Lord! I am now, O most elevated of men, anxious to behold thy divine countenance; wherefore, if thou thinkest it may be beheld by me, shew me thy never-failing spirit.

Krēēshnā.

Behold, O Arjōon, my million forms divine, of various species, and diverse shapes and colours. Behold the \textit{Adēētyās}, and the \textit{Vāsōōs}, and the \textit{Rōōdrās}, and the \textit{Mārōōts}, and the twins \textit{Āśweēn} and \textit{Kōōmār} \textsuperscript{96}. Behold things wonderful, never seen before. Behold, in this my body, the whole world animate and inanimate, and all things else thou hast a mind to see. But as thou art unable to see with these thy natural eyes, I will give thee a heavenly eye, with which behold my divine connection.

Sānjāy.

The mighty compound and divine being \textit{Hārēē}, having, O Rājā, thus spoken, made evident unto Arjōon his supreme and heavenly form; of many a mouth and eye; many a wondrous sight; many a heavenly ornament; many an up-raised weapon; adorned with celestial robes and cahplets; anointed with heavenly essence;

\textsuperscript{96} Āśweēn and Koomār.—Reputed the twin offsprings of the Sun, and physicians of the Gods.
Charles Wilkins

covered with every mavellous thing; the eternal God, whose countenance is turned on every side! The glory and amazing splendour of this mighty being may be likened to the sun rising at once into the heavens, with a thousand times more than usual brightness. The son of Pāndōo then beheld within the body of the God of Gods, standing together, the whole universe divided forth into its vast variety. He was overwhelmed with wonder, and every hair was raised an end. He bowed down his head before the God, and thus addressed him with joined hands.

Ārjōoṁ.

I behold, O God! within thy breast, the Dews assembled, and every specific tribe of beings. I see Brāhmā, that Deity sitting on his lotus-throne; all the Rĕĕšĕĕs and heavenly Ōŏrăgăs 97. I see thyself, on all sides, of infinite shape, formed with abundant arms, and bellies, and mouths, and eyes; but I can neither discover thy beginning, thy middle, nor again thy end, O universal Lord, form of the universe! I see thee with a crown and armed with club and Chăkră 98, a mass of glory, darting refulgent beams around. I see thee, difficult to be seen, shining on all sides with light immeasurable, like the ardent fire or glorious sun. Thou art the Supreme Being, incorruptible, worthy to be known! Thou art prime supporter of the universal orb! Thou art the never-failing and eternal guardian of religion! Thou art from all beginning, and I esteem thee Pŏŏrŏŏśh 99. I see the without beginning, without middle, and without end; of valour infinite; of arms innumerable; the sun and moon thy eyes; thy mouth a flaming fire, and the whole world shining with thy reflected glory! The space between the heavens and the earth is possessed by thee alone, and every point around: the three regions of the universe, O mighty spirit! behold 97 Ōŏrăgăs.—Who crawl upon their breasts:—serpents.

98 Chăkră.—A kind of discus with a sharp edge, hurled in battle from the point of the fore-finger, for which there is a hole in the centre.—See the story of the churning of the ocean, p. 109.
99 Pŏŏrŏŏśh.—Already explained.
The Bhāgvāt-Gēētā

the wonders of thy awful countenance with troubled minds. Of the celestial bands, some I see fly to thee for refuge; whilst some, afraid, with joined hands sing forth thy praise. The Māhārśhee{s}, holy bands, hail thee, and glorify thy name with adorating praises. The Rōōdrās, the Adēetyās, the Vāsōōs, and all those beings the world esteemeth good; Āswēēn and Kōōmār, the Mārōōts and the Ooōshmēēpās; the Gāndhārvs and the Yākʃhās, with the holy tribes of Soors, all stand gazing on thee, and all alike amazed! The worlds, alike with me, are terrified to behold thy wondrous form gigantic; with many mouths and eyes with many arms, and legs, and breast; with many bellies, and with rows of dreadful teeth! Thus as I see thee, touching the heavens, and shining with such glory; of such various hues, with widely-opened mouths, and bright expanded eyes, I am disturbed within me; my resolution faileth me, O Vĕĕśhnŏŏ! and I find no rest! Having beheld thy dreadful teeth, and gazed on thy countenance, emblem of Time's last fire, I know not which way I turn! I find no peace! Have mercy then, O God of God! thou mansion of the universe! The sons of Dhrēētărāśhtrā, now, with all those rulers of the land, Bheēšhmā, Drōōn, the son of Sōōt, and even the fronts of our army, seem to be precipitating themselves hastily into thy mouths, discovering such frightful rows of teeth! whilst some appear to stick between thy teeth with their bodies sorely mangled. As the rapid streams of full-flowing rivers roll on to meet the ocean's bed; even so these heroes of the human race rush on towards thy flaming mouths. As troops of insects, with increasing speed, seek their own destruction in the flaming fire; even so these people, with swelling fury, seek their own destruction. Thou involvest and swallowest them altogether, even unto the last, with thy flaming mouths; whilst the whole world is filled with thy glory, as thy awful beans, O Vēēšhmōō, shine forth on all sides! Reverence be unto thee, thou most exalted! Deign to make known unto me who is this God of awful figure! I am anxious to learn thy source, and ignorant of what thy presence here portendeth.
I am Time, the destroyer of mankind, matured, come hither to seize at once all these who stand before us. Except thyself not one of all these warriors, destined against us in these numerous ranks, shall live. Wherefore, arise! seek honor and renown! defeat the foe, and enjoy the full-grown kingdom! They are already, as it were, destroyed by me. Be thou alone the immediate agent. Be not disturbed! Kill Dron, and Bheshma, and Jayadratha, and Karn, and all the other heroes of the war already killed by me. Fight! and thou shalt defeat thy rivals in the field.

When the trembling Arjuna heard these words from the mouth of Krishnā, he saluted him with joined hands, and addressed him in broken accents, and bowed down terrified before him.

Arjuna.

Ottrēēhēēkēs! the universe rejoiceth because of thy renown, and is filled with zeal for thy service. The evil spirits are terrified and flee on all sides; whilst the holy tribes bow down in adoration before thee. And wherefore should they not, O mighty Being! bow down before thee, who, greater than Brāhma, art the prime Creator! eternal God of Gods! the world’s mansion! Thou art the incorruptible Being, distinct from all things transient! Thou art before all Gods, the ancient Pūrūṣottama, and the supreme supporter of the universe! Thou knowest all things, and art worthy to be known; thou art the supreme mansion, and by thee, O infinite form! the universe was spread abroad. Thou art Vāyu the God of wind, Āgnēś the God of fire, Varōōν the God of oceans, Sāṃkśa the moon, Prājāpātēś the God of nations, and Prāpēētēṁāhā the mighty ancestor. Reverence! Reverence be unto thee a thousand times repeated! Again and again Reverence! Reverence be unto thee! Reverence be unto thee before and behind! Reverence be unto thee on all 100 Except thyself.—Thyself should include his brothers, who were also saved.

101 The immediate agent.—The instrument to execute the decree of Fate.
fides, O thou who art all in all! Infinite is thy power and thy glory! Thou includest all things, wherefore thou art all things! Having regarded thee as my friend, I forcibly called thee Krēśhnā, Yādāvā, Friend! but, alas! I was ignorant of this thy greatness, because I was blinded by my affection and presumption. Thou haft, at times, also in sort been treated ill by me; in thy recreations, in thy bed, on thy chair, and at thy meals; in private and in public; for which, O Being inconceivable! I humbly crave thy forgiveness.

Thou art the father of all things animate and inanimate; thou art the sage instructor of the whole, worthy to be adored! There is none like unto thee; where then, in the three worlds, is there one above thee? Wherefore I bow down; and, with my body prostrate upon the ground, crave thy mercy, Lord! worthy to be adored; for thou shouldest bear with me, even as a father with his son, a friend with his friend, a lover with his beloved. I am well pleased with having beheld things before never seen; yet my mind is overwhelmed with awful fear. Have mercy, then, O heavenly Lord! O manesion of the universe! And shew me thy celestial form. I wish to behold thee with the diadem on thy head, and thy hands armed with club and Chākrā; assume then, O God of a thousand arms, image of the universe! thy four-armed form 102.

Krēśhnā.

Well pleased, O Ārjōōn, I have shewn thee, by my divine power, this my supreme form the universe in all its glory, infinite and eternal, which was never seen by any one except thyself; for no one, O valiant Kooro! in the three worlds, except thyself, can such a sight of me obtain; nor by the Vēds, nor sacrifices, nor profound study; nor by charitable gifts, nor by deeds, nor by the most severe mortifications of the flesh. Having beheld my form, thus awful, be not disturbed, nor let thy faculties be confounded. When thou 102 Thy four-armed form.—In which the Deity is usually represented in his incarnations, the images of which Ārjōōn had been accustomed to behold without emotion.

art relieved from thy fears, and thy mind is restored to peace, then behold this my wondrous form again.

Sānjāy. The son of Vāsūdēv having thus spoken unto Ārjōṅ, shewed him again his natural form; and having re-assumed his milder shape, he presently asswaged the fears of the affrighted Ārjōṅ.

Ārjōṅ. Having beheld thy placid human shape, I am again collected; my mind is no more disturbed, and I am once more returned to my natural state.

Krēēshnā. Thou hast beheld this my marvellous shape, so very difficult to be seen, which even the Dēws are constantly anxious to behold. But I am not to be seen, as thou hast seen me, even by the assistance of the Vēḍs, by morifications, by sacrifices, by charitable gifts; but I am to be seen, to be known in truth, and to be obtained by means of that worship which is offered up to me alone; and he goeth unto me whose works, are done for me; who esteemeth me supreme; who is my servant only; who hath abandoned all consequences, and who liveth amongst all men without hatred.
The Bhāgvāt-Gēētā
Lecture XII.

OF SERVING THE DEITY IN HIS VISIBLE AND INVISIBLE FORMS.

Ārjōōn.

Of those thy servants who are always thus employed, which know their duty best? those who worship thee as thou now art; or those who serve thee in thy invisible and incorruptible nature?

Krēēshnā.

Those who having placed their minds in me, serve me with constant zeal, and are endued with steady faith, are esteemed the best devoted. They too who, delighting in the welfare of all nature, serve me in my incorruptible, ineffable, and invisible form; omnipresent, incomprehensible, standing on high fixed and moveable, with subdued passions and understandings, the same in all things, shall also come unto me. Those whose minds are attached to my invisible nature have the greater labour to encounter; because an invisible path is difficult to be found by corporeal beings. They also who, preferring me, leave all works for me, and, free from the worship of all others, contemplate and serve me alone, I presently raise them up from the ocean of this region of mortality, whose minds are thus attached to me. Place then thy heart on me, and penetrate me with thy understanding, and thou shalt, without doubt, hereafter enter unto me. But if thou shouldst be unable, at once, steadfastly to fix thy mind on me, endeavour to find me by means of constant practice. If after practice thou art still unable, follow me in my works supreme; for by performing works for me, thou shalt attain perfection. But shouldst thou find thyself unequal to this task, put thy trust in me alone, be of humble spirit, and forswake the fruit of every action. Knowledge is better than practice, meditation is distinguished from knowledge, forswaking the fruit of action from meditation, for happiness hereafter is derived from such forswaking.
Charles Wilkins

He my servant is dear unto me, who is free from enmity, the friend of all nature, merciful, exempt from pride and selfishness, the same in pain and pleasure, patient of wrongs, contented, constantly devout, of subdued passions, and firm resolves, and whose mind and understanding are fixed on me alone, he also is my beloved of whom mankind are not afraid, and who of mankind is not afraid; and who is free from the influence of joy, impatience, and the dread of harm. He my servant is dear unto me who is unexpecting, just and pure, impartial, free from distraction of mind, and who hath forsworn every enterprise. He also is worthy of my love, who neither rejoiceth nor findeth fault; who neither lamenteth nor coveteth, and, being my servant, hath forsworn both good and evil fortune, He also is my beloved servant, who is the same in friendship and in hatred, in honor and in dishonor, in cold and in heat, in pain and pleasure; who is unsolicitous about the event of things; to whom praise and blame are as one; who is of little speech, and pleased with whatever cometh to pass; who owneth no particular home, and who is of a steady mind. The who seek this Āmrēēta of religion even as I have said, and serve me faithfully before all others, are, moreover, my dearest friends.

103 Āmrēēta.—The water of immortality, the Ambrosia of the Hindoo Gods.—See the story of churning the ocean, p. 109.
The Bhāgvat-Gīētā
Lecture XIII.

EXPLANATION OF THE TERMS Kshētrā AND Kshētrā-Gnā.

Ārjōōn.

I now am anxious to be informed, O Kesōō! what is Prākrēĕtēē, who is Pōŏrŏŏśh; what is meant by the words Kshētrā and Kshētrā-gnā, and what by Gnān and Gnēya.

Krēēshnā.

Learn that by the word Kshētrā is implied this body, and that he who is acquainted with it is called Kshētrā-gnā. Know that I am that Kshētra-gnā in every mortal frame. The knowledge of the Kshētrā and the Kshētrā-gnā is by me esteemed Gnān or wisdom.

Now hear what that Kshētrā or body is, what it resembleth, what are its different parts, what it proceedeth from, who he is who knoweth it, and what are its productions. Each hath been manifoldly sung by the Rēēśhēēs in various measures, and in verses containing divine precepts, including arguments and proofs.

This Kshētrā or body, then, is made up of the five Māhābhōōt (elements), Āhānkār (self-consciousness), Bōŏdhēē (understanding), Āvyāktām (invisible spirit), the eleven Eēndrēēyā (organs), and the five Eēndrēēyā-gōchār (faculties of the five senses); with Eechā and Dwēshā (love and hatred), Sookh and Dookh (pleasure and pain), Chētānā (sensibility), and Dhrēētēē (firmness).

Thus have I made known unto thee what that Kshētrā or body is, and what are its component parts.

Gnān, or wisdom, is freedom from self-esteem, hypocrisy and injury; patience, rectitude, respect for masters and teachers, chastity, steadiness, self-constraint, disaffection for the objects of the senses, freedom from pride, and a constant attention \[104\] to birth, death, decay, sickness, pain and defects; exemption from attachments and affection \[105\] for children, wife, and home; a constant evenness of temper upon the arrival of every event, whether longed for or not; a constant and invariable worship paid to me alone; worshipping in a private place, and a dislike to the society of man; a constant study of the superior spirit \[106\]; and the inspection of the advantage to be derived from a knowledge of the Tāttwā or first principle.
Charles Wilkins

This is what is distinguished by the name of Gnān, or wisdom. Āgnān, or ignorance, is the reverse of this.

I will no tell thee what is Gnēa, or the object of wisdom, from understanding which thou wilt enjoy immortality. It is that which hath no beginning, and is supreme, even Brāhm, who can neither be called Sāt (ens) nor Asāt (non ens) \[107\]. It is all hands and feet; it is all faces, heads, and eyes; and, all ear, it sitteth in the midst of the world possessing the vaft whole. Itself exempt from every organ, it is the reflected light of every faculty of the organs. Unattached, it containeth all things; and without quality it partaketh of every quality. It is the inside and the outside, and it is the moveable and immovable of all nature. From the minuteness of its parts it is inconceivable. It standeth at a distance, yet is it present. It is 104 And a constant attention to birth, &c.—To look upon them as evils.

105 Exemption from attachments and affection, &c.—i. e. That no attachments or affections should draw a man from the exercise of his devotion; or that all worldly cares must be abandoned for the attainment of that wisdom which is to free the soul from future birth.
106 The superior spirit.—God, the universal soul.
107 Sāt (ens) nor Asāt (non ens).—The opposite meanings of these two words render this passage peculiarly mysterious; and even the commentators differ about their true signification. The most rational interpretation of them is, that the Deity in his works is a substance, or a material Being, and in his essence immaterial; but as he is but one, he cannot positively be denominated either one or the other.
The Bhāgvat-Gēētā

undivided, yet in all things it standeth divided. It is the ruler of all things: it is that which now destroyeth, and now produceth. It is the light of lights, and it is declared to be free from darkness. It is wisdom that which is the object of wisdom, and that which is to be obtained by wisdom; and it presideth in every breast.

Thus hath been described together what is Kśētrā or body, what is Gnān or wisdom, and what is Gnēyā or the object of wisdom. He my servant who thus conceiveth me obtaineth my nature.

Learn that both Prākrēṭēē and Pŏŏrōōśh are without beginning. Know also that the various component parts of matter and their qualities are co-existent with Prākrēṭēē.

Prākrēṭēē is that principle which operateth in the agency of the instrumental cause of action.

Pŏŏrōōśh is that Hetōō or principle which operateth in the sensation of pain and pleasure. The Pŏŏrōōśh resideth in the Prākrēṭēē, and partaketh of those qualities which proceed from the Prākrēṭēē. The consequences arising from those qualities, are the cause which operateth in the birth of the Pŏŏrōōśh, and determineth whether it shall be in a good or evil body. Pŏŏrōōśh is that superior being, who is called Māhēswar, the great God, the most high spirit, who in this body is the observer, the director, the protector, the partaker.

He who conceiveth the Pŏŏrōōśh and the Prākrēṭēē, together with the Gŏŏn or qualities, to be even so as I have described them, whatever mode of life he may lead, he is not again subject to mortal birth.

108 Are the cause which operateth in the birth of the Pŏŏrōōśh, &c.—That is, The influence of the three Gŏŏn, or qualities, over the human mind, not only determines the future birth of the soul, but into what rank of beings it shall transmigrate; for to transmigrate it is doomed, until it hath attained a degree of wisdom more powerful than the influence of those qualities.
Charles Wilkins

Some men, by meditation, behold, with the mind, the spirit within themselves; others, according to the discipline of the Sāṅkhya (contemplative doctrines), and the discipline which is called Kārmā-yōg (practical doctrines); others again, who are not acquainted with this, but have heard it from others, attend to it. But even these, who act but from the report of others, pass beyond the gulf of death.

Know, O chief of the race of Bhārāt, that every thing which is produced in nature, whether animate or inanimate, is produced from the union of Kṣhētrā and Kṣhētrā-gnā, matter and spirit. He who beholdeth the Supreme Being alike in all things, whilst corrupting, itself uncourrupting; and conceiving that God in all things is the same, doth not of himself injure his own soul, goeth the journey of immortality. He who beholdeth all his actions performed by Prākrēētēē, nature, at the same time perceiveth that the Ātmā or soul is inactive in them. When he beholdeth all the different species in nature comprehended in one alone, and so from it spread forth into their vast variety, he then conceiveth Brāhm, the Supreme Being. This supreme spirit and incorruptible Being, even when it is in the body, neither acteth, nor is it affected, because its nature is without beginning and without quality. As the all-moving Ākās, or ether, from the minuteness of its parts, passeth every where unaffected, even so the omnipresent spirit remaineth in the body unaffected. As a single sun illuminateth the whole world, even so doth the spirit enlighten every body. They who, with the eye of wisdom, perceive the body and the spirit to be thus distinct, and that there is a final release from the animal nature, go to the Supreme.
Lecture XIV.

OFF THE THREE GŌŃN OR QUALITIES.

Krēēshnă.

I will now reveal unto thee a most sublime knowledge, superior to all others, which having learnt, all the Mōōnēēs have passed from it to supreme perfection. They take sanctuary under this wisdom, and, being arrived to that virtue which is similar to my own, they are not disturbed on the day of the confusion of all things, nor born again on their renovation.

The great Brāhm is my womb. In it I place my fœtus; and from it is the production of all nature. The great Brāhm is the womb of all those various forms which are conceived in every natural womb, and I am the father who soweth the seed.

There are three Gōŏn or qualities arising from Prăkrĕētĕē or nature: Sătwă truth, Răjă passion, and Tāmă darkness; and each of them confineth the incorruptible spirit in the body. The Sătwă-Gōŏn, because of its purity, is clear and free from defect, and intwineth the soul with sweet and pleasant consequences, and the fruit of wisdom. The Răjă-Gōŏn is of a passionate nature, arising from the effects of worldly thirst, and imprisoneth the soul with the consequences produced from action. The Tămă-Gōŏn is the offspring of ignorance, and the confounder of all the faculties of the mind; and it imprisoneth the soul with intoxication, sloth, and idleness. The Sătwă-Gōŏn prevaileth in felicity, the Rājă in action, and the Tămă, having possessed the soul, prevaileth in intoxication. When the Tămă and the Răjă have been overcome, then the Sătwă appeareth; when the Răjă and the Sătwă, the Tămă; and when the Tămă and the Sătwă, the Răjă. When Gnān, or wisdom, shall become evident in this body at all its gates, then shall it be known that the Sătwă-Gōŏn is prevalent within. The love of gain, industry, and the commencement of works; intemperance, and inordinate desire, are produced from the prevalency of the Rājā-Gōōn; whilst the tokens of the Tămă-Gōōn are gloominess, idleness, fottishness, and distraction of thought. When the body is dissolved whilst the Sātwā-Gōōn prevaleth, the soul proceedeth to the regions of those immaculate beings who are acquainted with the Moſt High. When the body findeth dissolution whilst the Rājā-Gōōn is predominate, the soul is born again amongst those who are attached to the fruits of their actions. So, in like manner, should the body be dissolved whilst the Tămă-Gōōn is prevalent, the spirit is conceived again in the wombs of irrational beings. The fruit of good works is called pure and holy; the fruit of the Rājā-Gōōn is pain; and the fruit of the Tămă-Gōōn is ignorance. From the Sātwā is produced wisdom, from the Rājā covetousness, and from the Tămă madness, distraction, and ignorance. Those of the Sātwā-Gōōn mount on high, those of the Rājā stay in the middle, whilst those abject followers of the Tămă-Gōōn sink below.

When he who beholdeth perceiveth no other agent than these qualities, and discovereth that there is a being superior to them, he at length findeth my nature; and when the soul hath surpassed these three qualities, which are co-existent with the body, it is delivered from birth and death, old-age and pain, and drinketh of the water of immortality.

Ārjōōn.

By what tokens is it known that a man hath surpassed these three qualities? What is his practice? What are the means by which he overcometh them.

Krēēshnā.

He, O son of Pāndōō, who depifeth not the light of wisdom, the attention to worldly things, and the distraction of thought when they come upon him, nor longeth for them when they disappear; who, like one who is of no party, sitteth unagitated by the three qualities; who, whilst the qualities are present, sitaneth still and moveth not; who is self-dependent and the same in ease and pain, and to whom iron, stone, and gold are as one; firm alike in love and dislike, and the same whether praised or blamed; the same in honor and disgrace; the same on the part of the friend and the foe, and who forfaketh all enterprize; such a one hath surmounted the influence of the qualities. And he, my servant, who serveth me alone with due attention, having overcome the influence of the qualities, is formed to be absorbed in Brāhma, the Supreme. I am the emblem of the immortal, and of the incorruptible; of the eternal, of justice, and of endless bliss.
THE BHĀGVĀT-GĒṬĀ

Charles Wilkins
Lecture XV.

Of Pŏŏrŏŏshŏttămă.

Krĕēshnă.

The incorruptible being is likened unto the tree Āśwătthă, whose root is above and whose branches are below, and whose leaves are the Vēds. He who knoweth that, is acquainted with the Vēds. Its branches growing from the hrtee Gŏŏn or qualities, whose lesser shoots are the objects of the organs of sense, spread forth some high and some low. The roots which are spread abroad below, in the regions of mankind, are restrained by action. Its form is not to be found here, neither its beginning, nor its end, nor its likeness. When a man hath cut down this Āśwătthă, whose root is so firmly fixed, with the strong ax of disinterest, from that time that place is to be sought from whence there is no return for those who find it; and I make manifest that first Pŏŏrŏŏsh from whom is produced the ancient progression of all things.

Those who are free from pride and ignorance, have prevailed over those faults which arise from the consequences of action, have their minds constantly employed in watching over and restraining the inordinate desires, and are freed from contrary causes, whose consequences bring both pleasure and pain, are no longer confounded in their minds, and ascend to that place which endureth for ever. Neither the sun, nor the moon, nor the fire enlighteneth that place from whence there is no return, and which is the supreme mansion of my abode.

It is even a portion of myself that in this animal world is the universal spirit of all things. It draweth together the five organs and the mind, which is the sixth, that it may obtain a body, and that it may leave it again; and Ėĕśwăr, having taken them under his charge, accompanyeth them from his own abode as the breeze the fragrance from the flower. He presideth over the organs of hearing, feeling, feeling, tasting, and smelling, together with the mind, and attendeth to their objects. The foolish see it not, attended by the Goōn or qualities, in expiring, in being, or in enjoying; but those who are endued with the eye of wisdom behold it. Those also who industriously apply their minds in meditation may perceive it planted in their own breasts, whilst those of unformed minds and weak judgments, labouring, find it not.

Know that the light which proceedeth from the sun and illuminateth the whole world, and the light which is in the moon, and in the fire, are mine. I pervade all things in nature, and guard them with my beams. I am the moon, whose nature it is to give the quality of taste and relish, and to cherish the herbs and plants of the field. I am the fire residing in the bodies of all things which have life, where, joined with the two spirits which are called Prān and Opān 109, I digest the food which they eat, which is of four kinds 110. I penetrate into the hearts of all men; and from me proceed memory, knowledge, and the loss of both. I am to be known by all the Vēds or books of divine knowledge: I am he who formed the Vēdant 111, and I am he who knoweth the Vēds.

There are two kinds of Pōōrōōśh in the world, the one corruptible, the other incorruptible. The corruptible Pōōrōōśh is the body of all things in nature; the incorruptible is called Kōōthāśtā, or he who standeth on the pinnacle 112. There is another Pōōrōōśh 113 most high.

109 Prān and Řōpān.—The breathing spirit, and the spirit which acteth in the bowels to expel the faces.
110 Which is of four kinds.—Either to be masticated with the teeth, lapped in with the tongue, sucked in by the lips, or imbibed by the throat.
111 The Vēdant.—A metaphysical treatise on the nature of God, which teacheth that matter is a mere delusion, the supposed author of which is Vyās.
112 Kōōthāśtā, or he who standeth on the pinnacle.—The divine essence, which, according to the opinion of some of their philosophers, is without quality, and sitteth aloof inactive.
113 There is another Pōōrōōśh, &c. &c.—This, and the following period, are so full of mystery, that the Translator despairing of revealing it to the satisfaction of the reader. Perhaps Krēēfhnā only means to collect into one view the several
The Bhāgvāt-Gēētā

the Pārāmātmā or supreme soul, who inhabiteth the three regions of the world, even the incorruptible Eēswār. Because I am above corruption, so also am I superior to incorruption; wherefore in this world, and in the Vēds, I am called Pōörōōʃhōttāmā. The man of a found judgment, who conceiveth me thus to be the Pōörōōʃhōttāmā, knoweth all things, and serveth me in every principle.

Thus, O Ār$jōōn$, have I made known unto thee this moſt myſterious Sāʃrā 114; and he who underſtandeth it ſhall be a wise man, and the performer of all that is fit to be done.

appellations Kōoṭhāʃtā, Pōörōōʃh, Pārāmātmā, Eēswār, and Pōörōōʃhōttāmā, by which the Deity is deſcribed by as many different theologists, in order to expoſe their various opinions respecting his nature, and unite them in one.

The Bhāgvat-Gītā
Lecture XVI.

OF GOOD AND EVIL DESTINY.

Krēēshnā.

The man who is born with divine destiny is endued with the following qualities: exemption from fear, a purity of heart, a constant attention to the discipline of his understanding; charity, self-restraint, religion, study, penance, rectitude, freedom from doing wrong, veracity, freedom from anger, resignation, temperance, freedom from slander, universal compassion, exemption from the desire of slaughter, mildness, modesty, discretion, dignity, patience, fortitude, chastity, unrevengefulness, and a freedom from vain-glory: whilst those who come into life under the influence of the evil destiny are distinguished by hypocrify, pride, presumption, anger, harshness of speech, and ignorance. The divine destiny is for Mōkṣh, or eternal absorptin in the divine nature; and the evil destiny confineth the soul to mortal birth. Fear not, Ārjōōn, for thou art born with the divine destiny before thee. Thus there are two kinds of destiny prevailing in the world. The nature of the good destiny hath been fully explained. Hear what is the nature of the evil.

Those who are born under the influence of the evil destiny know not what it is to proceed in virtue, or recede from vice; nor is purity, veracity, or the practice of morality to be found in them. They say the world is without beginning, and without end, and without an Eĕśwār; that all things are conceived by the junction of the sexes; and that love is the only cause. These lost souls, and men of little understandings, havin fixed upon this vision, are born of dreadful and inhuman deeds for the destruction of the world. They trust to their carnal appetites, which are hard to be satisfied; are hypocrites, and overwhelmed with madness and intoxication. Because of their folly they adopt false doctrines, and continue to live the life of impurity. They abide by their inconceivable opinions, even unto the day of confusion, and determine within their own minds that the gratification of the sensual appetites is the supreme good. Fast bound by the hundred cords of hope, and placing all their trust in lust and anger, they seek by injustice the accumulation of wealth, for the gratification of their inordinate desires. “This, to-day, hath been acquired by me. I shall obtain this object of my heart. This wealth I have, and this shall I have also. This foe have I already slain, and others will I forthwith vanquish. I am Eĕswăr, and I enjoy; I am consummate, I am powerful, and I am happy; I am rich, and I am endued with precedence amongst men; and where is there another like unto me? I will make presents at the feasts and be merry.” In this manner do those ignorant men talk, whose minds are thus gone astray. Confounded with various thoughts and designs, they are entangled in the net of folly; and being firmly attached to the gratification of their lufts, they sink at length into the Nărāk of impurity. Being self-conceited, stubborn, and ever in pursuit of wealth and pride, they worship with the name of worship and hypocrisy, and not according to divine ordination; and, acting all their trust in pride, power, ostentation, lust, and anger, they are overwhelmed with calumny and detraction, and hate me in themselves and others: wherefore I cast down upon the earth those furious abject wretches, those evil beings who thus disperse me, into the womb of evil spirits and unclean beasts. Being doomed to the wombs of Āsōors from birth to birth, at length not finding me, they go unto the most infernal regions. There are these three passages to Nărāk (or the infernal regions); lust, anger, and avarice, which are the destroyers of the soul; wherefore a man should avoid them; for, being freed from these gates of sin, which arise from the influence of the Tămĕ-Gŏŏn, he advanceeth his own happiness; and at length he goeth the journey of the Most High. He who abandoneth the dictates of the Sāfră to follow the dictates of his lufts, attaineth neither perfection, happiness, nor the regions of the Most High. Wherefore, O Ārjŏŏn, having made thyself acquainted with the precepts of the Sāfră, in the establishment of what is fit and unfit to be done, thou shouldst perform those works which are declared by the commandments of the Sāfră.
The Bhāgvat-Gēēṭā
Lecture XVII.

OF FAITH DIVIDED INTO THREE SPECIES.

Ārjōōn.

W hat is the guide of thoſe men, who, although they neglect the precepts of the Sāfrā, yet worship with faith? Is it the Sātwā, the Rājā, or the Tāmā-Gōōn?

Krēēshnā.

The faith of mortals is of three kinds, and is produced from the constitution. It is denominated after the three Gōōn, Sătwākēē, Rājāsēē, or Tāmāsēē. Hear what these are. The faith of every one is a copy of that which is produced from the Sātwā-Gōōn. The mortal Pōōrōōf being formed with faith, of whatever nature he may be, with that kind of faith is he endued. Thoſe who are of the disposition which ariſeth from the Sătwā-Gōōn worship the Dēws; thoſe of the Rājā-Gōōn the Yăkshăs, and the Răkshăs; and thoſe of the Tāmā-Gōōn worship the departed ſpirits and the tribe of Bhōōts. Thoſe men who perform severe mortifications of the fleſh, not authorized by the Săfrā, are posſeſſed of hypocrisy and pride, and oerwhelmed with luſt, passion and tyrannic ſtrength. Thoſe fools torment the ſpirit that is in the body, and myself also who am in them. Know what are the resolutions of thoſe who are born under the influence of the evil ſpirit.

There are three kinds of food which are dear unto all men. Worſhip, zeal 115, and charity are each of them also divided into three ſpecies. Hear what are their diſtinctions.

115 Zeal, in the vulgar acceptation of the word, ſignifies the voluntary infliction of pain, the modes of doing which, as praſticed to this day by the zealots of India, are as various as they are horrible and aſtoniſhing. Krēēshnă, by pointing out what true zeal is, tacitly condemns thoſe extravagant mortifications of the fleſh.
The food that is dear unto those of the Sătwă-Gŏŏn is such as increases their length of days, their power and their strength, and keeps them free from sickness, happy and contented. It is pleasing to the palate, nourishing, permanent, and congenial to the body. It is neither too bitter, too sour, too salt, too hot, too pungent, too astringent, nor too inflammable. The food that is coveted by those of the Răjă-Gŏŏn giveth nothing but pain and misery: and the delight of those in whom the Tămă-Gŏŏn prevaleth, is such as was dressed the day before, and is out of season; hath lost its taste, and is grown putrid; the leavings of others, and all things that are impure.

That worship which is directed by divine precept, and is performed without the desire of reward, as necessary to be done, and with an attentive mind, is of the Sătwă-Gŏŏn.

That worship which is performed with a view to the fruit, and with hypocrisy, is of the Tămă-Gŏŏn.

That worship which is performed without regard to the precepts of the law, without the distribution of bread, without the usual invocations, without gifts to the Brāhmāns at the conclusion, and without faith, is of the Răjă-Gŏŏn.

Respect to the Dēws, to Brāhmāns, masters, and learned men; chastity, rectitude, the worship of the Deity, and a freedom from injury, are called bodily zeal.

Gentleness, justice, kindness, and benignity of speech, and attention to one's particular studies, are called verbal zeal.

Content of mind, mildness of temper, devotion, restraint of the passions, and a purity of soul, are called mental zeal.

This threefold zeal being warmed with supreme faith, and performed by men who long not for the fruit of action, is of the Sātwā-Gōōn.
The Bhāgvāt-Gēētā

The zeal which is shewn by hypocrisy, for the sake of the reputation of sanctity, honor, and respect, is said to be of the Rājā-Gōōn; and it is inconstant and uncertain.

The zeal which is exhibited with self-torture, by the fool, without examination, or for the purpose of injuring another, is of the Tămā-Gōōn.

That charity which is bestowed by the disinterested, because it is proper to be given, in due place and season, and to proper objects, is of the Sātwā-Gōōn.

That which is given in expectation of a return, or for the sake of the fruit of the action, and with reluctance, is of the Rājā-Gōōn.

That which is given out of place and season, and to unworthy objects, and, at the same time, ungraciously and scornfully, is pronounced to be of the Tămā-Gōōn.

ॐ Ōm, तत् Tăt, and सत् Săt, are the three mystic characters used to denote the Deity.

By him in the beginning were appointed the Brāhmāns, the Vēds, and religion: hence the sacrificial, charitable, and zealous ceremonies of the expounders of the word of God, as they are ordained by the law, constantly proceed after they have pronounced Ōm!

Tăt having been pronounced by those who long for immortality, without any inclination for a temporary reward of their actions, then are performed the ceremonies of worship and zeal, and the various deeds of charity.
The word Săt is used for qualities which are true, and for qualities that are holy, the word Săt is also applied to deeds which are praiseworthy. Attention in worship, zeal, and deeds of charity, are also called Săt. Deeds which are performed for Tăt are also to be esteemed Săt.

Whatever is performed without faith, whether it be sacrifices, deeds of charity, or mortifications of the flesh, is called Asăt; and is not for this world or that which is above.
The Bhāgavat-Gītā
Lecture XVIII.

OF FORSAKING THE FRUITS OF ACTION
FOR OBTAINING ETERNAL SALVATION

Ārjōōn.

I wish much to comprehend the principle of Sānnyās, and also of Tyāg, each separately.

Krēēshnā.

The bards conceive 116 that the word Sānnyās implieth the forfaking 116  The Bards conceive, &c.—The meaning of this period is too evident to require a note. But, in order to shew that the commentators of India are not less fond of searching for mystery, and wandering from the simple path of their author into a labyrinth of scholastic jargon, than some of those of more enlightened nations, who for ages have been labouring to entangle the plain unerring clew of our holy religion, the Translator, in this place, will intrude the following literal version of the comment written upon it by one Srēē-dhăr Swāmĕĕ, whose notes upon the whole are held in as much esteem as the text, which at this day, they say is unintelligible without them. It can seldom happen that a commentator is inspired with the same train of thought and arrangement of ideas as the author whose sentiments he presumes to expound, especially in metaphysical works. The Translator hath seen a comment, by a zealous Persian, upon the wanton odes of their favorite Poet Hafiz, wherein every obscene allusion is sublimated into a divine mystery, and the host and the tavern are as ingeniously metamorphoosed into their prophet and his holy temple.

Note by Srēē-Dhăr Swāmĕĕ, to the Passage Above Alluded to.

“The Bards, &c.—The Vēds say—‘Let him who longeth for children make offerings. Let him who longeth for heaven make offerings, &c. &c.’ The Bards understand Sānnyās to be a forfaking, that is, a total abandonment, of such works as are performed for the accomplishment of a wish, such works as are bound with the cord of desire. The Pāṇḍēēts know, that is, they understand, Sānnyās to impy also a forfaking of all works, together with all their fruits. The disputators, that is such as expound or make clear, call Tyāg a forfaking of the fruit only of every work that is desirable, whether such as are ordained to be performed constantly, or only at stated periods; and not a forfaking of the work itself. But how can there be a forfaking of the fruit of such constant and stated works as have no particular fruit or reward annexed to them? The forfaking of all actions which are desirable; and they call Tyāg, the forfaking of the fruits of every action. Certain philosophers have declared that works are as much to be avoided as crimes; whilst others say that deeds of worship, mortifications, and charity should not be forfaken. Hear what is my decree upon the Tyāg.

Tyāg, or forfaking, is pronounced to be of three natures. But deeds of worship, mortification, and charity are not to be forfaken: they are proper to be performed. Sacrifices, charity, and mortifications are purifiers of the philosopher. It is my ultimate opinion and decree, that such works are absolutely to be performed, with a forfaking of their consequences and the prospect of their fruits. The retirement from works, which are appointed to be performed, is improper.

The forfaking of them through folly and distraction of mind, ariseth from the influence of the Tāmā-Gōōn.

The forfaking of a work because it is painful, and from the dread of bodily affliction, ariseth from the Rājā-Gōōn; and he who thus leaveth undone what he ought to do, shall not obtain the fruit of forfaking.

of a barren woman’s child cannot be conceived—It is said—‘Although one who longeth for heaven, or for a store of cattle, &c. should all his life perform the ceremonies which are called Sāndyā, or feed the fire upon the altar, and in these and the like ceremonies, no particular reward has ever been heard of; yet whilst the law is unable to engage a provident and wary man in a work where no human advantage is to be seen, at the same time it ordaineth that even he who hath conquered the universe, &c. shall perform sacrifices; still for these, and the like religious duties, it hath appointed some general reward.’—But it is the opinion of Gōŏrōŏ, that the law intended these works merely for its own accomplishment. Such a tenet is unworthy of notice, because of the difficulty of obliging men to pay attention to these works.—It is also said, that there is a reward annexed to the general and particular duties; that they who perform them shall become inhabitants of the Pōŏnyā-lōk; that by works the Pēětrēē-lōk is to be attained; that by good works crimes are done away, &c. &c. Wherefore it is properly said,—that they call Tyāg a forfaking of the fruits of every action.”
The Bhāgvāt-Gēētā

The work which is performed because it is appointed and esteemed necessary to be done, and with forfaking of the consequences and the hope of a reward, is, with such a forfaking, declared to be of the Sātwā-Gōōn.

The man who is posseed of the Sātwā-Gōōn is thus a Tyāgēē, or one who forfaketh the fruit of action. He is of a sound judgment, and exempt from all doubt; he complaineth not in adversity, nor exulteth in the succeds of his undertakings.

No corporeal being is able totally to refrain from works. He is properly denominated a Tyāgēē who is a forsaker of the fruit of action.

The fruit of action is threefold: that which is coveted, that which is not coveted, and that which is neither one nor the other. Those who do not abandon works obtain a final release; not those who withdraw from action, and are denominated Sānnyāses.

Learn, O Ārjōōn, that for the accomplishement of every work five agents 117 are necessary, as is further declared in the Sānkhyā and Vēdānt-Sāśtrās:—attention and supervifion, the actor, the implements of various forts, distinct and minifod contrivances, and laſtly the favor of Providence. The work which a man undertaketh, either with his body, his speech, or his mind, whether it be lawful or unlawful, hath these five agents engaged in the performance. He then who after this, because of the imperfection of his judgment, beholdeth no other agent than himſelf, is an evil-thinker and seeth not at all. He who hath no pride in his disposition, and whose judgment is not affected, although he ſhould destroy a whole world, neither killeth, nor is he bound thereby 118.

117 Five agents, &c.—The five agents here implied, are probably the soul, as supervifor the mind, as actor or director the organs, as implements, &c.
118 Nor is he bound thereby.—He is not confined to mortal birth.
In the direction of a work are three things: Gnān, Gnēyā, and Pārēēgnātā. The accomplishment of a work is also threefold: the implementation, the action, and the agent. The Gnān, the action, and the agent are each distinguished by the influence of the three Gŏŏn. Hear in what manner they are declared to be after the order of the three Gŏŏn.

That Gnān, or wisdom, by which one principle alone is seen prevalent in all nature, incorruptible and infinite in all things finite; is of the Sātwā-Gŏŏn.

That Gnān, or wisdom, is of the Răjă-Gŏŏn, by which a man believeth that there are various and manifold principles prevailing in the natural world of created beings.

That Gnān, or wisdom, which is mean, interested in one single object alone as if it were the whole, without any just motive or design, and without principle or profit, is pronounced to be of the Tămă-Gŏŏn.

The action which is appointed by divine precept, is performed free from the thought of its consequences and without passion or spite, by one who hath no regard for the fruit thereof, is of the Sātwā-Gŏŏn.

The action which is performed by one who is fond of the gratification of his lusts, or by the proud and selfish, and is attended with unremitted pains, is of the Răjă-Gŏŏn.

The action which is undertaken through ignorance and folly, and without any foresight of its fatal and injurious consequences, is pronounced to be of the Tămă-Gŏŏn.

119 Gnān, Gnēyā, and Pārēēgnātā.—Wisdom, the object of wisdom, and the superintending spirit.
The agent who is regardlesss of the consequences, is free from pride and arrogance, is endued with fortitude and resolution, and is unaffected whether his work succeed or not, is said to be of the Sātwā-Gōōn.

That agent is pronounced to be of the Rājā-Gōōn who is a slave to his passions, who longeth for the fruit of action, who is avaricious, of a cruel disposition, of impure principles, and a slave to joy and grief.

The agent who is unattentive, indiscreet, stubborn, dissembling, mischiefous, indolent, melancholy, and dilatory, is of the Tāmā-Gōōn.

Hear also what are the threefold divisions of understanding and firmness, according to the influence of the three Gōōn, which are about to be explained to thee distinctly and without reserve.

The understanding which can determine what it is to proceed in a business, and what it is to recede; what is necessary and what is unnecessary; what is fear and what is not; what is liberty and what is confinement, is of the Sātwā-Gōōn.

The understanding which doth not conceive justice and injustice; what is proper and what is improper; as they truly are, is of the Rājā-Gōōn.

The understanding which, being overwhelmed in darkness, mistaketh injustice for justice, and all things contrary to their true intent and meaning, is of the Tāmā-Gōōn.

That steady firmness, with which a man, by devotion, restraineth every action of the mind and organs, is of the Sātwā-Gōōn.

The interested firmness by which a man, from views of profit, persifteth in the duties of his calling, in the gratification of his lusts, and the acquisition of wealth, is declared to be of the Rājā-Gōōn.
Charles Wilkins

That stubborn firmness, by which a man of low capacity departeth not from sloth, fear, grief, melancholy, and intoxication, is of the Tămă-Gōōn.

Now hear what is the threefold division of pleasure.

That pleasure which a man enjoyeth from his labour, and wherein he findeth the end of his pains; and that which, in the beginning, is as poison, and in the end as the water of life, is declared to be of the Sātwă-Gōōn, and to arise from the consent of the understanding.

That pleasure which ariseth from the conjunction of the organs with their objects, which in the beginning is as sweet as the water of life, and in the end as a poison, is of the Rājā-Gōōn.

That pleasure which in the beginning and the end tendeth to stupify the soul, and ariseth from drowsiness, idleness, and intoxication, is pronounced to be of the Tămă-Gōōn.

There is not any thing either in heaven or earth, or amongst the hosts of heaven, which is free from the influence of these three Gōōn or qualities, which arise from the first principles of nature.

The respective duties of the four tribes of Brāhmān 120, Kṣhētrē 121, Vīfyā, and Sōōdră 122, are also determined by the qualities which are in their constitutions.

120 Brāhmān—is a derivative from the word Brāhm, the Deity, and signifies a Theologift or Divine.
121 Kṣhētrē—is derived from the Kṣhētră, land.
122 Vīfyā and Sōōdră—are of doubtful origin.
The Bhāgvāt-Gēētā

The natural duty of the Brāhmān is peace, self-restraint, zeal, purity, patience, rectitude, wisdom, learning, and theology.

The natural duties of the Kṣhētrēē are bravery, glory, fortitude, rectitude, not to flee from the field, generosity, and princely conduct.

The natural duty of the Viṣyā is to cultivate the land, tend the cattle, and buy and sell.

The natural duty of a Sōōdrā is servitude.

A man being contented with his own particular lot and duty obtaineth perfection. Hear how that perfection is to be accomplished.

The man who maketh an offering of his own works to that being from whom the principles of all beings proceed, and by whom the whole universe was spread forth, by that means obtaineth perfection.

The duties of a man’s own particular calling, although not free from faults, is far preferable to the duty of another, let it be ever so well pursued. A man by following the duties which are appointed by his birth doeth no wrong. A man’s own calling, with all its faults, ought not to be forfaken. Every undertaking is involved in its faults, as the fire in its smoke. A disinterested mind and conquered spirit, who, in all things, is free from inordinate desires, obtaineth a perfection unconnected with works, by that resignation and retirement which is called Sānnyās; and having attained that perfection, learn from me, in brief, in what manner he obtaineth Brāhm, and what is the foundation of wisdom.

A man being endued with a purified understanding, having humbled his spirit by resolution, and abandoned the objects of the organs; who hath freed himself from passion and dislike; who worshippeth with discrimination, eateth with moderation, and is humble of speech, of body, and of mind; who preferreth the devotion of meditation, and who constantly placeth his confidence in dispassion; who is freed from ostentation, tyrannic strength, vain-glory, lust, anger, and avarice; and who is exempt from selfishness, and in all things temperate, is formed for being Brāhm. And thus being as Brāhm, his mind is at ease, and he neither longeth nor lamenteth, He is the same in all things, and obtaineth my supreme assistance; and by my divine aid he knoweth, fundamentally, who I am, and what is the extent of my existence; and having thus discovered who I am, he at length is absorbed in my nature.

A man also being engaged in every work if he put his trust in me alone, shall, by my divine pleasure, obtain the eternal and incorruptible mansions of my abode.

With thy heart place all thy works on me; prefer me to all things else; depen upon the use of thy understanding, and think constantly of me; for by doing so thou shalt, by my divine favor, surmount every difficulty which surroundeth thee. But if, through pride, thou wilt not listen unto my words, thou shalt undoubtedly be lost. From a confidence in thy own self-sufficiency thou mayst think that thou wilt not fight. Such is a fallacious determination, for the principles of thy nature will impel thee. Being confined to action by the duties of thy natural calling, thou wilt involuntarily do that from necessity, which thou wantest, through ignorance, to avoid.

Eēswār resideth in the breast of every mortal being, revolving with his supernatural power all things which are mounted upon the universal wheel of time. Take sanctuary then, upon all occasions, with him alone, O offspring of Bhārāt; for by his divine pleasure thou shalt obtain supreme happiness and an eternal abode.

Thus have I made known unto thee a knowledge which is a superior mystery. Ponder it well in thy mind, and then act as it seemeth best unto thee.

Attend now to these my supreme and most mysterious words, which I will now for thy good reveal unto thee, because thou art dearly beloved of me. Be of my mind, be my servant, offer unto me alone and bow down humbly before me, and thou shalt verily come unto me; for I approve thee, and thou art dear unto me. Forfear every other religion, and fly to me alone. Grieve not then, for I will deliver thee from all thy transgressions.

This is never to be revealed by thee to any one who hath not subjected his body by devotion, who is not my servant, who is not anxious to learn; nor unto him who despiseth me.

He who shall teach this supreme mystery unto my servant, directing his service unto me, shall undoubtedly go unto me; and there shall not be one amongst mankind who doeth me a greater kindness; nor shall there be in all the earth one more dear unto me.

He also who shall read these our religious dialogues, by him I may be sought with the devotion of wisdom. This is my resolve.

The man too who may only hear it without doubt, and with due faith, may also be faved, and obtain the regions of happiness provided for those whose deeds are virtuous.

Hath what I have been speaking, O Ārjōṇ, been heard with thy mind fixed to one point? Is the distraction of thought, which arose from thy ignorance, removed?

Ārjōṇ.

By thy divine favor, my confusion of mind is lost, and I have found understanding. I am now fixed in my principles, and am freed from all doubt; and I will henceforth act according to thy words.
Charles Wilkins

Sānjāy.

In this manner have I been an ear-witnes of the astonishing and miraculous conversation that hath passed between the son of Vāsōōḍēv, and the magnanimous son of Pāndōō; and I was enabled to hear this supreme and miraculous doctrine, even as revealed from the mouth of Krēēshnā himself, who is the God of religion, by the favor of Vyās 123. As, O mighty Prince! I recollect again and again this holy and wonderful dialogue of Krēēshnā and Ārjōōn, I continue more and more to rejoice and as I recall to my memory the more than miraculous form of Hārēē 124, my astonishment is great, and I marvel and rejoice again and again! Wherever Krēēshnā the God of devotion may be, wherever Ārjōōn the mighty bowman may be, there too, without doubt, are fortune, riches, victory, and good conduct. This is my firm belief.

The End of the Gēētā.

123 By the favor of Vyās—who had endued Sānjāy with an omniscient and prophetic spirit, by which he might be enabled to recount all the circumstancies of the war to the blind Dhrēētārāśhtrā.

124 Hārēē.—One of the names of the Deity.
Chapter 15

There is a fair and stately mountain, and its name is Merū, a most exalted mass of glory, reflecting the sunny rays from the splendid surface of its gilded horns. It is clothed in gold, and is the respected haunt of Dēws and Gandhārvs. It is inconceivable, and not to be encompassed by sinful man; and it is guarded by dreadful serpents. Many celestial medicinal plants adorn its sides, and it stands, piercing the heavens with its aspiring summit, a mighty hill inaccessible even by the human mind! It is adorned with trees and pleasant streams, and resoundeth with the delightful songs of various birds.

The Sōrs, and all the glorious hosts of heaven, having ascended to the summit of this lofty mountain, sparkling with precious gems, and for eternal ages raised, were sitting, in solemn synod, meditating the discovery of the Amrētā, or water of immortality. The Dēw Nārāyān being also there, spoke unto Brāhmā, whilst the Sōrs were thus consulting together, and said, “Let the ocean, as a pot of milk, be churned by the united labour of the Sōrs and Āsōrs; and when the mighty waters have been stirred up, the Amrētā shall be found. Let them collect together every medicinal herb, and every precious thing, and let them stir the ocean, and they shall discover the Amrētā.”

There is also another mighty mountain whose name is Māndār, and its rocky summits are like towering clouds. It is clothed in a net of the entangled tendrils of the twining creeper, and resoundeth with the harmony of various birds. Innumerable savage beasts infest its borders, and it is the respected haunt of Kēnnārs, Dēws, and Āpsārs. It stands eleven thousand Yōjān above the earth, and eleven thousand more below its surface.

As the united bands of Dēws were unable to remove this mountain, they went before Vēēṣhnō, who was sitting with Brāhmā, and addressed them in these words: “Exert, O masters, your most superior wisdom to remove the “mountain Māndār, and employ your utmost power for our good.”

Vēēṣhnō and Brāhmā having said, “It shall be according to your will,” he with the lotus eye directed the King of Serpents to appear; and Anāntā arose, and was instructed in that work by Brāhmā, and commanded by Nārāyān to perform it. Then Anāntā, by his power, took up that king of mountains, together with all its forests and every inhabitant thereof; and the Sōōrs accompanied him into the presence of the Ocean, whom they addressed, saying, “We will stir up thy waters to obtain the Āmrēētā.” And the Lord of the waters replied—“Let me also have a share, seeing I am to bear the violent “agitations that will be caused by the whirling of the mountain.” Then the Sōōrs and the Āsōōrs spoke unto Kōōrmā‑raj, the King of the Tortoises, upon the strand of the ocean, and said—“My Lord is able to be the supporter of this mountain.” The Tortoise replied, “Be it so:” and it was placed upon his back.

So the mountain being set upon the back of the Tortoise, Eēndrā began to whirl it about as it were a machine. The mountain Măndăr served as a churn, and the serpent Vāsōōkēē for the rope; and thus in former days did the Dēws, the Āsōōrs, and the Dānōōs, begin to stir the waters of the ocean for the discovery of the Āmrēētā.

The mighty Āsōōrs were employed on the side of the serpent’s head, whilst all the Sōōrs assembled about his tail. Ānāntā, that sovereign Dēw, stood near Nārāyān.

They now pull forth the serpent’s head repeatedly, and as often let it go; whilst there issued from his mouth, thus violently drawing to and fro by the Sōōrs and Āsōōrs, a continual stream of fire, and smoke, and wind; which ascending in thick clouds replete with lightning, it began to rain down upon the heavenly band, who were already fatigued with their labour; whilst a shower of flowers was shaken from the top of the mountain, covering the heads of all, both Sōōrs and Āsōōrs. In the mean time the roaring of the ocean, whilst violently agitated with the whirling of the moutain Măndăr by the Sōōrs and Āsōōrs, was like the bellowing of a mighty cloud.—Thousands of the various productions of the waters were torn to pieces by the mountain, and confounded with the briny flood; and every specific being of the deep, and all the inhabitants of the great abyss which is below the earth, were annihilated; whilst, from the violent agitation of the mountain, the forest trees were dashed against each other, and precipitated from its utmost height, with all the birds thereon; from whose violent confrication... a raging fire was produced, involving the whole mountain with smoke and flame, as with a dark blue cloud, and the lightning’s vivid flash. The lion and the retreating elephant are overtaken by the devouring flames, and every vital being, and every specific thing, are consumed in the general conflagration.

The raging flames, thus spreading destruction on all sides, were at length quenched by a shower of cloud-borne water poured down by the immortal Ėĕndră. And now a heterogeneous stream of the concocted juices of various trees and plants ran down into the briny flood.

It was from this milk-like stream of juices produced from those trees and plants, and a mixture of melted gold, that the Sŏŏrs obtained their immortality.

The waters of the ocean now being assimilated with those juices, were converted into milk, and from that milk a kind of butter was presently produced; when the heavenly bands went again into the presence of Brăhmă, the granter of boons, and addressed him, saying—“Except Nărăyăn, every other Sŏŏr and Âsŏŏr is fatigued with his labour, and still the Âmrĕĕtă doth not appear; wherefore the churning of the ocean is at a stand.” Then Brăhmă said unto Nărăyăn—“Endue them with recruited strength, for thou art their support.” And Nărăyăn answered and said—“I will give fresh vigour to such as co-operate in the work. Let Măndăr be whirled about, and the bed of the ocean be kept steady.”

When they heard the words of Nărăyăn, they all returned again to the work, and began to stir about with great force that butter of the ocean; when there presently arose from out the troubled deep—first the moon, with a pleasing countenance, shining with ten thousand beams of gentle light; next followed Srēē, the Goddess of fortune, whose seat is the white lily of the water; then Sŏŏră-Dēvēē, the Goddess of wine, and the white horse called Oochīśrăvă. And after these there was produced, from the unctuous mafs, the jewel Kowľōŏbh, that glorious sparkling gem worn by Nărăyăn on his breast; so Părĕĕjăt, the tree of plenty, and Sŏŏrăbhĕĕ, the cow that granted every heart’s desire.

The moon, Sŏŏră-Dēvēē, the Goddes Srēē, and the horse as swift as thought, instantly marched away towards the Dēws, keeping in the path of the sun.
Then the Dēw Dhānwāntārēē, in human ſhape, came forth, holding in his hand a white veſſel filled with the immortal juice Āmrĕĕtă. When the Āsŏŏrs beheld these wondrous things appear, they raſed their tumultuous voices for the Āmrĕĕtă, and each of them clamorouſly exclaimed—“This of right is mine!”

In the mean time Īrāvāt, a mighty elephant, arose, now kept by the God of thunder; and as they continued to churn the ocean more than enough, that deadly poſion iſſued from its bed, burning like a raging fire, whose dreadful fumes in a moment ſpread thoroughout the world, conſounding the three regions of the univerſe with its mortal ſtench; until Seev, at the word of Brāhmā, swallowed the fatal drug to ſave mankind; which remaining in the throat of that sovereign Dēw of magic form, from that time he hath been called Nĕĕl-Kānt, becauſe his throat was ſtained blue.

When the Āsŏŏrs beheld this miraculous deed, they became deſperate, and the Āmrĕĕtă and the Goddeſs Srēē became the ſource of endleſs hatred.

Then Nārāyăn assumed the character and perſon of Mōhēēnēē Māyā, the power of inchangment, in a female form of wonderful beauty, and ſtood before the Āsŏŏrs; whose minds being faſcinated by her preſence, and deprived of reaſon, they ſeized the Āmrĕĕtă, and give it unto her.

The Āsŏŏrs now cloath themſelves in coſtly armour, and, feizing their various weapons, ruſh on together to attack the Šŏŏrs. In the mean time Nārāyăn, in the female form, having obtained the Āmrĕĕtă from the hands of their leader, the hoſts of Šŏŏrs, during the tumult and confuſion of the Āsŏŏrs, drank of the living water.

And it fo fell out, that whilſt the Šŏŏrs were quenching their thirſt for immortality, Rāhōŏ, an Āsŏŏr, assumed the form of a Šŏŏr, and began to drink alſo. And the water had but reached his throat, when the ſun and moon, in friendſhip to the Šŏŏrs, discovered the deceit; and instantly Nārāyăn cut off his head, as he was drinking, with his ſplendid weapon Chăkră. And the gigantic head of the Āsŏŏr, emblem of a mountain’s ſummit, being thus ſeparated from his body by the Chăkră’s edge, bounded into the heavens with a dreadful cry, whilſt his ponderous trunk fell cleaving the ground asunder, and shaking the whole earth unto its foundation, with all its islands, rocks, and forests. And from that time the head of Rāhōo resolved an eternal enmity, and continueth, even unto this day, at times to seize upon the sun and moon.

Now Nārayān, having quitted the female figure he had assumed, began to disturb the Āsōors with fundry celestial weapons; and from that instant a dreadful battle was commenced, on the ocean’s briny strand, between the Āsōors and the Sōors. Innumerable sharp and missile weapons were hurled; and thousands of piercing darts and battle-axes fell on all sides. The Āsōors vomit blood from the wounds of the Chākrā, and fall upon the ground pierced by the sword, the spear, and spiked club.—Heads, glittering with polished gold, divided by the Pāttēès’ blade, drop incessantly; and mangled bodies, wallowing in their gore, lay like fragments of mighty rocks sparkling with gems and precious ores. Millions of sighs and groans arise on every side; and the sun is overcast with blood, as they clash their arms, and wound each other with their dreadful instruments of destruction.

Now the battle’s fought with the iron-spiked club, and, as they close, with clenched fist; and the din of war ascendeth to the heavens! They cry—“Purifie! strike! fell to the ground!” so that a horrid and tumultuous noise is heard on all sides.

In the midst of this dreadful hurry and confusion of the fight, Nār and Nārayān entered the field together. Nārayān beholding a celestial bow in the hand of Nār, it reminded him of his Chākrā, the destroyer of the Āsōors. The faithful weapon, by name Sōōdārsān, ready at the mind’s call, flew down from heaven with direct and refulgent speed, beautiful, et terrible to behold. And being arrived, glowing like the sacrificial flame, and spreading terror around, Nārayān with his right arm formed like the elephantine trunk, hurled forth the ponderous orb, the speedy messenger, and glorious ruin of hostile towns; who, raging like the final all-destroying fire, shot bounding with defolating force, killing thousands of the Āsōors in his rapid flight, burning and involving, like the lambent flame, and cutting down all that would oppose him. Anon he climbeth the heavens, and now again darteth into the field like a Pĕĕsāch to feast in blood.
Now the dauntless Āsōörs strive, with repeated strength, to crush the Sŏörs with rocks and mountains, which, hurled in vast numbers into the heavens, appeared like scattered clouds, and fell, with all the trees thereon, in millions of fear-exciting torrents, striking violently against each other with a mighty noise; and in their fall the earth, with all its fields and forests, is driven from its foundation: they thunder furiously at each other as they roll along the field, and spend their strength in mutual conflict.

Now Nār, seeing the Sŏösrs overwhelmed with fear, filled up the path to heaven with showers of golden-headed arrows, and split the mountain summits with his unerring shafts; and the Āsōörs, finding themselves again sore pressed by the Sŏösrs, precipitately flee: some rush headlong into the briny waters of the ocean, and others hide themselves within the bowels of the earth.

The rage of the glorious Chākrā, Sŏodoxsān which for a while burnt like the oil-fed fire, now grew cool, and he retired into the heavens from whence he came. And the Sŏösrs having obtained the victory, the mountain Māndār was carried back to its former station with great respect; whilst the waters also retired, filling the firmament and the heavens with their dreadful roarings.

The Sŏösrs guarded the Āmrēētā with great care, and rejoiced exceedingly because of their success; and Ėēndrā, with all his immortal bands, gave the water of life unto Nārāyān, to keep it for their use.”

FINIS.
The Bhāgvāt-Gītā
Charles Wilkins